Strip away the business model doublespeak, buzz phrase du jour language of Customer Relations Management, and it comes down to — "the customer is right." Respect their opinions. Honor their requests. Charge them fairly and put your heart and soul into satisfying them. If you do, they tell their friends, and those friends tell theirs, and before you know it you're James V. Zizzi and you've built over 250 magnificent custom homes on the East End — for some of the area's most discerning clients. More importantly, you've built second and third homes for them. And have even gone on to build homes for their children.

Some builders look at a home they've built and see nothing more. James V. Zizzi looks at his homes and sees so much more. Perhaps because he's building a following.

The Anatomy of a Medical Center

A Stony Brook House Call

First of all, what's the difference between a good hospital—and something called a Medical Center? Well, if you're feeling fine, you may not even think about it. But if you're really sick, there's all the difference in the world.

A Medical Center is a complex, self-contained "city of healing." This city must include a very special kind of hospital. It's called a "teaching hospital." We give it that title because the complex includes a medical school, where great specialists dedicate their lives to creating a new generation of doctors. (This means that patients are treated by teams of experts, giving hands-on care, even as they teach tomorrow's healers.)

Medical Centers also thrive on their clinical research. Their never-ending quest, probing the mysteries of our bodies and minds, helps ensure that tomorrow's medicine is being practiced today. Patients always benefit when theory is transformed into treatment, and pure research evolves into practical applications.

To stay on the cutting edge and even open new frontiers, all the great Medical Centers expand diagnosis and treatment with specialties in Cardiology, Genetics, Immunology, Obstetrics, Oncology, Pediatrics, and scores of others. And always, behind the vast clinical promise of the modern Medical Center, resides the very human staff, from the individual scientist, surgeon, clinician, nurse, or aide, to the administrator. They are human and individual, dedicated to maintaining a one-on-one tie to the all-important, never-forgotten patient.

Package Includes orchestra concert ticket, dinner at Lincoln Center's Panevino restaurant and deluxe round-trip transportation. SF

A Norman Rockwell Christmas Sat., Dec. 9th - Mon., Dec.11th (three day tour) - $389 pp./double occ. The Berkshire Mountains are the perfect backdrop for this holiday excursion. See hundreds of decorated trees set in The Berkshire Museum, holiday decorated "cottages" from the "Gilded Age" and 500,000 twinkling lights in a 2-1/2 mile drive. Package includes 2 nights hotel accommodations, 1 lunch at the famous Red Lion Inn, 2 dinners, tours, museum admissions, round-trip transportation and more. SF

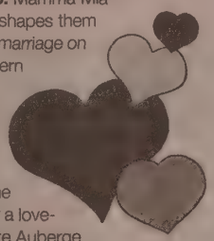
Les Miserables Wed., Jan. 3rd - $165 pp. Returning to Broadway for a 6-month engagement to celebrate becoming the world's longest-running musical, this legendary show based on Victor Hugo's epic novel tells the story of relentless policeman Javert's pursuit of escaped convict Jean Valjean over decades through the tumult of revolutionary France. Includes orchestra show ticket, lunch at Tavern on the Green and deluxe round-trip transportation. SF

Atlantic City Sun., Jan. 7th – Mon., Jan. 8th (overnight trip) - $125 pp./double occ. May lady luck be with you! Join us for an overnight to the Tropicana Casino & Resort. Package includes $10 in coins, dinner voucher, show (if available) and deluxe round-trip transportation. SF

"1964" THE TRIBUTE AT CARNEGIE HALL – World famous Re-creation of a Live Beatles Concert Sat., Jan. 27th - $165 pp. If you are too young to have seen the Beatles in concert for yourself or if you just want to do it again, here's the chance you've been waiting for. For over 20 years, this group of performers has successfully re-created every sensation of being at a Beatles concert circa 1966. Includes orchestra ticket (8 pm performance), dinner at a fine NYC restaurant and deluxe round-trip transportation. SF

Grey Gardens Wed., Jan. 31st - $170 pp. This show brings to life both the delightfully eccentric aunt and the cousin of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. Once among the brightest names in the pre-Camelot social register, these two women became East Hampton's most notorious recluses, living in a dilapidated 28-room mansion. Includes orchestra show ticket, lunch at a fine NYC restaurant and round-trip transportation. SF

Mamma Mia! Wed., Feb. 14th (Matinee performance) - $160 pp. Mamma Mia collects a group of hit songs by the Swedish supergroup ABBA and shapes them around the story of a single mother coping with her young daughter's marriage on a picturesque Greek isle. Includes orchestra show ticket, lunch at Tavern on the Green and deluxe round-trip transportation. SF



The Phantom of the Opera Wed., Feb. 14th (Evening performance) - $185 pp. Now the longest-running show in Broadway history, Andrew Lloyd Webber's The Phantom of the Opera tells the story of a disfigured musical genius who haunts the catacombs beneath the Paris Opera and exerts strange control over a lovely young soprano. Includes orchestra show ticket, dinner at La Petite Auberge and deluxe round-trip transportation. SF

What Was Down There?

RR Closes Gap Between Train and Platform in Southampton

By Dan Rattiner

The Long Island Railroad announced last week that they have closed the gap at the Southampton Railroad Station. To get on the train at that station, up until now, you had to step over an empty space between the railroad platform and the train that was 14 inches across. This had been a pretty daunting task for the disabled, the elderly or the children of the community over the years, many of whom had to be helped across the gap by conductors or friends. But that's what they were there for, these people always said.

The gap at Southampton rivaled that of about a quarter of the railroad stations on Long Island in size (none of the others were on the East End) and the gaps at these stations, as large as they were, existed without serious incident for many years. But then, on August 8th of this year, an 18-year-old girl named Natalie Snead fell down into the gap at the Woodside, Queens Station and moments later, as she tried to scurry under the platform to an open track, was hit by an oncoming train and killed. Since that time, the railroad has embarked on a program that might have been subtitled "If You Can't Raise the Bridge Lower the Water" and after measuring the gap at every station on the Island, proceeded to send railroad construction crews out at night to relocate the railroad tracks a few inches closer to the platforms to solve the problem at the worst of them.

The railroad did Woodside first, of course, and then prioritized others that they felt did not meet the criteria of five inches or less, and then proceeded with that work. They've done about half the stations on the list, and Southampton did not make the list, but then last week, at the last minute, they added Southampton and moved the tracks there. The job was completed October 27.

It's been interesting to read outraged letters to the editor and demands that officials be fired and so forth and so on, mostly in Newsday where all the publicity about the gaps first was made public. Since Ms. Snead was killed, there have been numerous twisted ankles and other injuries by those trying to negotiate the gaps, including a lawsuit from one older lady who broke her foot while trying to get on a train. That none of this really seemed to be a problem until now is curious, but now it is, and so they are fixing it.

What has not been revealed, however, is just exactly what it is that has been found in the dark area beneath these gaps. People would step on the train, things might be jarred loose from their persons as they made the step and they might not even have known that anything was lost. Then, the train would lurch forward with them on it and that would be that.

What has not been revealed, however, is just exactly what it is that has been found in the dark area beneath these gaps.

An employee of the railroad who did not want us to reveal his name did tell us he was present during the night that the gap was fixed at Southampton, and that the workmen , working by flashlight, made the following haul.

1. Eleven sets of keys, including four for Mercedes and three for BMWs, two for Rolls and one for a Bentley and one for a Toyota Corolla.

2. Eight bottles of suntan lotion.

3. Nineteen wallets, including one which dated back to the 1920s and contained a special card giving the name and address of the Duke Box, a famous speakeasy in Southampton during that era.

4. Two suitcases filled with money. One was leather and moldy and when opened revealed great stacks of brand new ten dollar bills that were issued in 1919, the other was more recent and had stacks of thousand dollar bills issued in 2002. No identification was found on either of them.

5. Five purses, including one that had a love letter to somebody named Martha from "Pierre in Paris." It was dated May 14, 1945.

6. One wooden folding deck chair with the canvas all rotted away.

7. One duffle bag containing men's clothes, including two bathing costumes, a pair of knickers and a fur hat dating from the 1930s.

8. Nineteen ladies hats, seventeen of which were floppy, wide-brimmed straw things.

9. Seven wedding rings of various sizes, three of which seemed to have been stomped by feet.

10. A portable AM radio built in the 1950s which when found was seen to be tuned to 1010 WINS.

11. A Honeywell portable air conditioner with the number "7" on it in felt marker.

12. An envelope containing the Federal Income Tax returns of Henry Jackson Cobb Rathskill from the year 1983. Total income was $71,312.14.

13. Six tickets to a Yankee baseball game for the night of July 14, 1949. They were for the second deck left field bleachers.

14. Eleven assorted right shoes and sneakers, and one left. Our source says the workmen believe it involves a shoe getting caught on something as the step was made and whether a person was right handed or left handed.

15. Two brassieres, one by Maidenform size 42C and the other by Victoria's Secret size 36B.

16. Five Rolexes

17. One ticket to P. Diddy's White Party in East Hampton in September 2004.

18. One NIXON FOR PRESIDENT poster.

19. One mounted deer head.

20. Six skateboards, used.

21. A giant Styrofoam right hand with the index finger pointing up and the inscription #1 on it in orange.

22. One pair of roller skates

23. One very large black metal trunk, two feet by three by five, containing all the paraphernalia used by a professional magician.

The railroad is currently attempting, according to our source, to find out who the magician was that might have lost a trunk down into the gap.

They want to know how he did it.

Election Results

At midnight on Tuesday, November sixth, Dan's Papers went to press. These were the results as of press time: The Democratic Party took control of the House, but the Senate was too close to call. Republican Eliot Spitzer will fill the office of governor, with Democrat David A. Patterson acting as Lieutenant Governor; Andrew M. Cuomo, a Democrat, was elected Attorney General; Republicans Kenneth P. LaValle and Fred W. Thiele, Jr. won the races for First District Senator and Second District State Assembly, respectively; Democrat Hillary Rodham Clinton will remain State Senator; and Tim Bishop, also a Democrat, will act as First District Congressman.

The Letter

Sanjay Kumar, Sentenced to 12 Years, a Fan of Dan's Papers

By Dan Rattiner

The recently deposed CEO of Computer Associates, Sanjay Kumar, was sentenced to 12 years in prison last Thursday.

He told the judge at his sentencing he knew what he did was wrong and was ready to accept the consequences for his actions.

Computer Associates, based on the Long Island Expressway next to the Radisson in Islandia, is the largest single employer on Long Island. It took over this dominant position as the fortunes of the Grumman Corporation waned and, finally, were bought up by Northrop and moved to California. Grumman made fighter planes. CA makes software.

Anyway, CA was founded by Charles Wang, who built his headquarters here on the East End about fifteen years ago to take advantage of the highly educated work force on the island. About 16,000 people work there.

Charles Wang handed the reins of the company over to his protégé, Sanjay Kumar, in 1998 and, personally worth many hundreds of millions of dollars, went on to greater things. He bought the New York Islanders. He bought much of downtown Oyster Bay and proceeded to finance much of the revival of its waterfront. More recently, he proposed a renovation and rebuilding of the entire campus where the Islander's play their hockey at the Nassau Coliseum. His proposal would have resulted in the tallest building on Long Island, a 45-story structure, with a lighthouse beacon on the top. It was not approved, however, but it did spark competition to rebuild the area, a project which was won by an alliance of Charles Wang and Reckson Associates, but without the lighthouse.

> Check the cash register. A few bucks here, a few bucks there. Then pay the bills, and if there is any money left over, divide it up among the stockholders.

In 2002, I wrote an article about Computer Associates and the trouble it was having with its accounting. I knew that the company was then in the hands of Sanjay Kumar, although Charles Wang, remained the Chairman of the Board of the Company. I had never met either man, but three weeks after I published it, I received a brief letter from Sanjay Kumar telling me he read and liked the article. As the troubles followed one upon the other after that, I never published the letter, or even showed it to anybody except close friends. I thought the letter might not have done Kumar any good in the courtroom, although on the other hand, it might have. I figured if anybody wanted me to say what was in it, they would ask me. But until then, I'd stay out of it. Now, with this sentencing, the die has been cast.

Here are excerpts of the article Kumar subsequently responded to, as it appeared in the issue of Dan's Papers on May 22, 2002.

"Computer Associates has, apparently zigged a few times when it should have zagged. A minority stockholder tried to force Wang (and Kumar) out last year but failed. And new accounting techniques put in place have been described by many as not telling you much about whether CA is doing well or badly.

"'Really, the only thing an investor can go on at Computer Associates is cash flow,' one Wall Street type recently wrote. 'You can see cash in and cash out. That's something anyway. But everything else is just kind of fuzzy.'"

(At this point the article describes the charges of financial manipulation placed against executives at Xerox, Enron, American Health Care and other companies because of accounting irregularities are presented. — dr)

"Wading through all this — I just read the President of the National Accounting Society has resigned for profiting on insider information — I got to thinking that maybe Computer Associates is on to something.

"Maybe Computer Associates has found the accounting technique of the future. Just count how much money came in that day. Check the cash register. A few bucks here, a few bucks there. Then pay the bills, and if there is any money left over, divide it up among the stockholders. We're with you Computer Associates."

Kumar wrote me his letter on official CA stationery. He said he had read the article and enjoyed it very much. He said maybe I really WAS onto something. I held onto the letter for a while. But I don't know where it is now.

I mentioned to my girlfriend yesterday that as a result of the letter I had received from Kumar, I felt a certain fondness for him, and hoped that the troubles overtaking Computer Associates would be over soon, and that it seemed kind of harsh what they sentenced Kumar to.

She replied — she possesses far more wisdom than I do — that my fondness for him was the result of feeling flattered. His letter indicated that he was a fan of the paper. I just liked that I was read in such high places. She reminded me, correctly, that I had never met the man.

At the trial, Sanjay Kumar defended himself by first describing his humble beginnings. He grew up in poverty in a rural area of Sri Lanka off the coast of India. His parents moved to America when he was 13. He learned English and went to college here and then medical school. But he found that his interest in computers and software was too strong and so he dropped out to take a job at a software company. Soon, Charles Wang discovered him and his apparent genius in that field, and hired him to work for Computer Associates and then made him his successor.

In 2001 and 2002, Kumar apparently ordered these "new accounting techniques" at Computer Associates to make it appear that the company was doing far better than it really was. Among the things he did was order the accounting department to book sales as revenue, so it would come in an earlier year, but delay the booking of expenses until they were actually paid, moving the expenses further along into the future. With more in and less out in those years, what appeared to be a windfall sent the stock at Computer Associates soaring presenting Kumar a bonus of tens of millions of dollars for his good works.

To make matters worse, when the federal regulatory agency that looks into these things began investigating the accounting practices at CA, Kumar ordered various documents shredded and then even wiped out records on his own personal computer's hard drive to try to hide the evidence.

"Didn't he ever hear of a sledge hammer?" I asked my girlfriend. "Didn't he ever hear of Long Island Sound? Doesn't a computer genius know if you erase a hard drive, the stuff on it can be restored?"

He liked my stories and read my articles. That's enough for me. So I guess I don't care what he did.

I'm with you Samjay.

And here's a joke from 2002.

An important member of an accounting firm is applying for a job with a major American corporation. It will be a big step up for him. He is sitting across from the interviewer.

"Well, you certainly have had considerable experience," the interviewer says, "and a good education. The Wharton School of Business. Harvard Law. You are very well qualified. But I wonder how good you are with some of the more mundane tasks."

"Try me,'" the applicant says.

"How much are two and two?"

"What kind of question is that? Surely you can see I would know the answer to that question."

The Ongoing Battle to Make a Good Bagel in San Francisco

By Dan Rattiner

A man goes into a Chinese Restaurant, sits down and the waiter hands him a menu. All that's on it is pizza and spaghetti.

"What's going on?" he asks.

"We're in a Jewish neighborhood," the waiter says.

Every morning, when I was growing up, my mother toasted bagels for breakfast. We lived in a suburb of New York City. They were excellent bagels. And she toasted them dark, just a whisker short of burnt. That's how I like bagels today.

I was fifteen when we moved to the East End. What a shock that was. I loved the East End. I loved the beaches, the sea and the harbors and the farms. But the East End had no bagels. None. Occasionally, friends of my parents would come out from the City and bring bagels. This was a very big deal. I was very influenced by this and afterwards, in my travels around the world to various places, I came to measure, at least in part, the quality of life where I was by the bagels or the lack thereof. Paris — great place, no bagels. Tokyo — great place, no bagels. Miami — okay place, bagels. Los Angeles — not so okay place, bagels. And so forth and so on.

Bagels of the beefy, amazing kind began to be produced in the Hamptons in the early 1980s. I was living in Bridgehampton at that time. I can actually recall the first day I went into this new bagel store on County Road 39. It opened at four in the morning and you could buy them fresh out of the oven. The place is still there.

As for other destinations around the globe, I am here to report an infinitesimal step in the right direction in the City of San Francisco.

> The only frame of reference I could give you as to what a so-called good bagel tastes like in San Francisco is to say they taste like Lender's Bagels.

I have always liked San Francisco. My daughter lives there now, so I go there all the time. I like the hills, the weather, the views of the sea, the hipness, the edge and the fact that fun is a big deal. It's probably the most ridiculously happy city I have ever been in. But in one regard, they are a bunch of phonies. They have bagels. They think they are good. And they are crap.

San Franciscans, who think it is cool to have bagels, say there is really nothing you can do about it. It is their wonderful, life-enhancing, humid, hazy weather. They say in New York City you can't make good sourdough bread and it is true. So they make good sourdough and very bad San Francisco bagels. So what? And they LIKE their bagels.

In previous visits to this town, I have had long arguments with counter people and managers in such places as Noah's Bagels in Potrero Hill, which is just one link in a chain of miserable bagel stores that, god forbid, has from time to time tried to open a branch outside of this town.

The people sit out front at tables in the sunshine wearing granny sunglasses and talking on the telephone or working their laptops, and they think they are just so cool. It's disgusting.

Noah's says they make good bagels. But they have no idea. They also don't know about promoting a bagel store. They have pictures of the Lower East Side and the Brooklyn Bridge on their walls, and they have a slogan that reads "schlep home a bag today." They don't even know what the word schlep means.

review: black film festival

By Renée Donlon

Another day, another film festival. Such is life in the Hamptons. But wait! This is one film fest you haven't seen before. Last Saturday's East End Black Film Festival was the first of its kind. The first annual, to be exact. And given the success of the day, the festival seems to have many annuals in its future.

The festival's success appears due to the drive of its creators and organizers. Presented by the East End African-American Museum and Center for Excellence (EEAAMCE), the film fest was created as a means to spread awareness of black culture to the area. The area, in fact, is one that Bonnie Cannon, co-founder of the EEAAMCE and Southampton Town Trustee, finds lacking in its focus on black history and culture. Finding that the Town, the community, the Parrish Museum, the Children's Museum, and others agreed with her, Cannon started the film fest to help fill the gap.

The day itself was quite full. The festival was a one-day event, but a day packed with six films of varying genre and length, speakers, and ethnic foods (including fried chicken, collared greens, etc.) by Gloria's of the Hamptons.

Among the speakers were Mayor Mark Epley of Southampton, and actress Ethel Ayler (seen on "The Cosby Show" as Claire Huxtable's mother) who was in town for the festival.

Bonnie Cannon and Jeffery Ward

Ms. Ayler must have gotten a chuckle when, due to technical difficulties with the slated 5 p.m. film, Constellation, the 1975 film Let's Do It Again was shown instead. The film stars Ms. Ayler's TV son-in-law Bill Cosby. Everyone else in the theatre got a few more chuckles from watching the comic partnership of Cosby and his co-star and director Sidney Poitier depict a pair of gangster hypnotizing, boxing match fixing, big-hearted schemers.

When the evening changed gears from Sidney Poitier in a lemon yellow suit and cape to a haunting and powerful film about racism, stuntman/producer/director Jeffery Ward lead the transition with a few words. After recent shooting for the upcoming Denzel Washington movie, American Gangster, the festival brought Ward back to his hometown. Ward was born and raised in Southampton, later moving to New York City to pursue his entertainment career. There, trying to stay in shape for stunt work while still paying his rent, he worked as a bike messenger and a fitness instructor at a gym where he was eventually discovered and hired for The Last Dragon. Yet, Ward likens the career of a stunt man to that of a football player; you can't do it forever. Knowing this, Ward familiarized himself with the workings and people of the business around him and eventually moved into producing and directing.

Ward spoke on behalf on another stuntperson turned director, Lisa France, his friend and the director of the gripping final film of the evening, The Unseen. The Unseen is largely that. The 2005 film was premiered only once before at Robert De Niro's Tribeca Film Festival in New York City, and has yet to be distributed.

Public Vs. Private

Bridgehampton Resident Maneuvers for His Own Private Beach

By Dan Rattiner

As you read this, there is an ongoing court battle to determine the fate of an oceanfront beach parcel of dunes in Bridgehampton. The Town owns it and has made use of this property for the last quarter of a century. Now, a man named Simpson, who recently built a house on the lot immediately next door to this beachfront parcel, says the town owns it but can't use it. And that the only people who can use it are he and his immediate neighbors. A decision is pending.

The story of this property, which is at the end of Surfside Drive, is complicated. But the essence of it is that from about 1965 to 1987, this beachfront property was indeed owned, in common, by Simpson and his neighbors, and they used it as an exclusive recreation area. However, in 1987, they defaulted on their taxes and it was taken over for unpaid taxes by the county. They in turn gave the property to the Town of Southampton, which has owned and used it since.

Simpson's argument, in court, is that although from that day until this, the Town indeed has the deed to the property, the Town is obliged to only allow Simpson and his neighbors to use it. In essence, he says that in 1987, when Marty Lang was the town supervisor, the Town agreed — and why they would do this is amazing considering that the former owner no longer had control of the property, the county did — to abide by the restrictions placed on the property. These restrictions say this is the recreation area for these homeowners. So now the Town has to maintain the property and keep it up, and the homeowners get the exclusive right to use it. But they have it tax-free. Simpson says this is in the deed.

> It will mean the property is for the exclusive use of only Simpson and his neighbors. And it will be one more public beach access lost forever.

As I mentioned to Mr. Simpson in an exchange of e-mails, this looks like one half of an under-the-table transaction. What did the town taxpayers get out of this bargain? Nothing. In fact, if Simpson wins, it will continue to cost the taxpayers to maintain and clean up this property, while they are still unable to use it. If ever something cried out for an investigation, this is it. The deeds and bills of sale are all available in microfiche. If Simpson and his friends prevail in court and the townspeople lose their right to use their own beach, it suggests a taxpayer's lawsuit against the town. Though that will not get the beach back. What kind of deal did they make?

Of course, you might say, it seems almost impossible that a judge would rule that the Town could not use its own property. But you never know. And furthermore, Simpson has hired one of the most effective lawyers I know on eastern Long Island, Bill Esseks, to represent him in this case.

Esseks is responsible for the victory for those developing the East Hampton Golf Club five years ago. The fairways of this golf club were originally plowed through a woods in Springs in the 1960s and 1970s by a man in the heavy construction business, Barry Bistrian. He'd bring his bulldozers there on the weekends. The course slowly got plowed into shape.

Bistrian had gotten the rough fairways plowed when the town stopped him. This was around 1980. He had gotten far enough along so that he wanted to build a clubhouse for the place. And the Town wouldn't approve it. So with no clubhouse, he reasoned, he had no golf course.

For the next fifteen years, Bistrian simply could not get approval for his clubhouse. But then he hired Esseks. Esseks read all the legal papers and found that the Town had given Bistrian permission to plow the fairways in 1972. "Finish the fairways and greens, and start playing golf on them," he said. "And forget the clubhouse. Bring in a trailer on wheels, park it there and that's your clubhouse." And so the course was finished, the membership was established and now the Town relented about the clubhouse. How could they continue to have a magnificent golf course with trailers like that at the 19th hole? They couldn't.

In the early going in this beachfront property case, two decisions have come down and the score is one to one. Simpson had put in boulders blocking access to the Town's property and the judge ruled he had to take them out, which he did. But then the judge also ruled that a restriction on this property that said beach vehicles could not drive down the sand road that crosses this property to the beach would stand.

Now it seems that Simpson is poised to say that if one of the restrictions on the property has to be upheld, then all of them do. And if that gets an approval from the court, it will mean the property is for the exclusive use of only Simpson and his neighbors. And it will be one more public beach access lost forever.

I have thought long and hard about all of this. It is, for one thing, about as selfish and unkind a thing for any individual to do to the other residents of a community in which they live, to try and take a public beach private.

I also wonder why the Town Trustees, a separate government body from the Town Board, has stepped aside as this has proceeded through the courts. The Southampton Town Trustees, a different group entirely from the Town Board, are charged with protecting the bays, wetlands and beaches and keeping them accessible for the use of the townspeople. The Trustees say that since the Town bought the property, they cannot step in to keep the access open. They have to work with the Town. But for hundreds of years, from 1683 until 1987 when title transferred to the Town, the Trustees had fishermen's and boat launching rights over this property and did exercise these rights.

It has also occurred to me that if there was no hanky panky in this sale to the Town, there might have been another explanation entirely.

Perhaps those who owned the property in 1987 DELIBERATELY stopped paying their taxes. There is case law that says if a property has restrictions over it, then these restrictions have to pass to the next owner of the property. Maybe these homeowners in common looked at this back in 1987 as a way to get to never again have to pay taxes on this beachfront land, and furthermore get the Town to take care of it for them. That's what would happen if the restrictions passed from owner to owner.

On the other hand, can restrictions such as these, made by a private party, pass to a Town that takes over a parcel because it defaults on paying taxes on the property? That would be some loophole.

I have some suggestions for what the Town could do while waiting for the legal decisions to transpire.

Build a fence along the property line separating the Town's land from Mr. Simpson's land. This is perfectly legal. It would keep anybody who uses this beachfront land from looking into Mr. Simpson's home and he would like that. Although it will also block his view of the ocean where the sun rises. He probably would not like that.

Next summer, if this legal battle is still going on, the Town ought to consider busing beachgoers to this small and isolated beach from the town centers. Busing beachgoers is already in effect from the town centers in two locations in Southampton town, to Sagg Beach and to Flying Point Beach.

Build a beach pavilion at the end of Ocean Road just a few hundred yards from this disputed beach to the West. Simpson has argued that the Town already has beachfront property and a beach. So he just wants the Town to give him his. That's fair. One for the Town and one for he and his friends. With his maintained by the Town.

Build a beach pavilion and then spread out the lifeguard stands in front of Simpson's property. There is no denying the beach from the high water mark down belongs to the Town and there is nothing he could do to stop them.

Simpson has his boulders, and when he tried putting a barrier up three years before and failed, the Town Supervisor at the time described him as the height of arrogance. The Town and the trustees should give back what he gives them. •

Saving Montauk

Both the Surfer Community and the Lighthouse are Montauk Icons

By David Lion Rattiner

It is no secret that the shoreline where the Montauk Lighthouse stands is slowly but surely being chipped away by the ocean's waves. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers have found an answer to the erosion problem however, by constructing a revetment surrounding the Montauk Lighthouse that will stretch 840 feet long and be reinforced with 12.6 tons of stone.

The surfers of the community, headed by the Surfrider Foundation, have voiced their concerns about the revetment, because they are afraid that reinforcing the Lighthouse will damage the waves at Turtle Cove and the legendary surf spot, The Alamo.

Although it is possible that the waves may change from the project, it is extremely important, if not vital, to the community of Montauk to recognize the importance of the Montauk Lighthouse and the value that it has as the beating heart of the community, drawing tourists from all over the world. It is officially a historical landmark and countless efforts by good members of the community such as Dick and Betsy White and Joe Gaviola of Montauk have been working tirelessly to ensure that the lighthouse stays intact and can withstand the elements in the future. "We are thinking 75 years into the future," Mr. Gaviola said to me on the telephone.

What are the options?

Well, it is clear that the revetment is the most reasonable and doable option and as much as we would like to move the Lighthouse back from the shoreline to protect it, according to the Army Corps of Engineers, it simply is not feasible because the structure is too fragile and it is also located on top of a hill, unlike the Lighthouse in Block Island that was moved back to protect from erosion. Moving the Montauk Lighthouse back would cause a very high possibility of damage to the structure. Also, moving the Lighthouse back would lower the elevation and would cause the view of it

MORE FISH, LESS FISH, HAPPY FISH, SAD FISH

By Sabrina C. Mashburn

The Atlantic Coastal Cooperative Statistics Partners will meet in Setauket on November first to decide the fate of Long Island fishermen who catch porgy and fluke, but by then it may be too late to be of any consequence this year. Attendees will include Gordon Colvin, director of the State Department of Environmental Conservation, and representatives from the National Marine Fisheries Service and the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission. Local authorities, such as East Hampton Town councilman and commercial fisherman Brad Loewen, and East Hampton Town Fishery Advisory Committee director Arnold Leo, have also been invited to attend.

Local officials such as Loewen and Leo have been asked to attend the meeting because they have voiced concern over methods used to determine the necessity of the abrupt ban on Fluke and Porgy fishing put into effect over the summer. The ban was considered an emergency measure in reaction to rapidly declining numbers of Porgy and Fluke, only three years before the end of the DEC's proposed ten-year-long conservation plan. The plan was meant to replenish the deteriorating stocks of Porgy and Fluke in New York State, but so far it had been determined to be a grand failure, due to the low numbers of fish counted in scientific trawling nets this year. However, many Long Islanders, including local officials, disagree with these findings, and have taken actions to protect the interests of the local economy by requesting that the daily fish count be raised. Local fisherman have cited imprecise data-collection methods as the cause for the alleged miscount, as gauges such as trawling surveys which count the number of fish in certain parts of the ocean cannot possibly serve as the basis from far away to be blocked. The engineers are not in favor of moving the Lighthouse back and neither is the historical society of Montauk because doing something like that will automatically make it non-historical, since it will no longer be in its original location. This will also cause loss of funding for the Lighthouse on a federal level.

Can we put in beach fill? Yes, we can put in beach fill, but it doesn't make any sense to do this because beach fill is a very, very temporary solution and for a structure as valuable as the Lighthouse, it simply is not logical, according to experts. T-groins with beach fill would change the shoreline drastically, costing a great deal of money, and a no-action plan would ultimately subject the Lighthouse to a large storm and threaten its stability. It could also change the waves as well at the Lighthouse, so neither party would be very happy from this solution.

From the Army Corps of Engineers' perspective, it seems that the problems they are foreseeing with the construction of a revetment are not that significant. They predict short-term impacts on public access, sightseeing, fishing, surfing and hiking during construction, but believe the long-term benefits would outweigh the short-term impacts.

From a surfer's perspective, it is vital to remember the historical value of this structure and the value that it has to the community and that a new wave break may form near that area that is just as good. Also, from a surfer's perspective, it is important to remember that as time goes on, even if no erosion control is put into place, the break will change, naturally.

From a non-surfer's perspective, it is important to remember the value of the surfers and how they contribute to the community of Montauk and all of Long Island for that matter. We are talking about a serious economic force of "dudes." Surfers from all over the world go to Ditch Plains for the break and legends such as Joel Tudor have been molded there. People enjoy the surf culture and visit Montauk to experience it. There are countless surf shops, suppliers, teachers and camps that all operate because there are waves in Montauk. If the Montauk Lighthouse is the heart of Montauk, the surfers are the blood that's pumped through it. When an erosion project is set in motion, the Surfrider Foundation should be fully informed, and if they have a suggestion it should be heard and acted upon if it is something that can be done.

Both sides need to try to agree on what is best for the community. Allowing the Lighthouse to fall into the ocean is not an option. Moving it back is not an option.

Not protecting the Lighthouse has no positive outcome and everyone in Suffolk County can agree on that.

As a result of a letter from East Hampton Town Supervisor Bill McGintee, written to Mr. Colvin in August, the daily limit on Porgy catches was raised from 60 pounds to over 1,200 pounds on October first. However, Mr. Loewen has stated that the increase came too late as Porgy schools are already starting to leave Gardiner's Bay.

Although the East Hampton Town Department of Natural Resources' plan to remedy the over-fishing crisis by releasing farm-raised flounder and blowfish into the ocean has been met with opposition from the Department of Environmental Conservation, healthy, non-genetically-modified fish bred from local, wild-caught specimens will continue to be released until the D.E.C. officially bans this conservation strategy.

As delicious, dependable fish that have made the waters surrounding Long Island many fisherman's favorites, Porgy and Fluke have also sparked some of the largest controversies over whether protecting these species for future generations entails preventing fisherman from making a living. Hopefully, the resolution to this conflict of interest will be found at the November meeting to the benefit of both fish and fisherman.

Property lost by Wainscott and now in the Village of Sagaponack.

Wainscott Clipped

A Nip, Snip and Tuck Leads to a Bigger, Better Sagaponack

By T.J. Clemente

The story goes that back in the eighties The Winged Foot Golf Club in Westchester County, New York raised it dues. At a Board Meeting a member rose to complain and challenge the increase. It is said the board huddled and told the member it was no longer a problem for the member because the board had just unanimously voted to rescind his membership. After the member paid next year's dues with the increase, he was reinstated. Now who was it that said, "Absolute power corrupts absolutely." Machiavelli himself would have been proud of the latest moves of the "poor" 40 of Sagaponack whose homes along Town Line Road were just transferred from The Wainscott school district to the Southampton school district because a map dating back to 1871 which had been the basis for the boundaries was no longer going to be used. Not to worry, however. No children will be affected. Gloriously it seems there is only one child of school age in any of the 40 homes and the child is attending a private school.

So what this actually means is that $90 million worth of real estate will get a school tax increase from 14.22 per $100 to 15.24 per $100. It's nice to pay that increase when you have no one using the schools. An analogy would be every resident in East Hampton getting an increase to help subsidize the Staten Island Ferry, which I'm sure, is already probably happening in the state tax each year.

Professor Hinton of The George Washington University Political Science Department of the late 70s use to say politics is who gets what, where, when, how, and why. In this case it is the 40 homes on Town Line Road getting a school tax increase in Sagaponack as a result of some of the fine print of the incorporation of the village of Sagaponack because of the ruling of the Eastern Suffolk Board of Cooperative Educational Services.

There were no reports of widespread protest

CAN'T ALL WE FISH JUST GET ALONG?

By Sabrina C. Mashburn

First, there was one — in the front office, behind the receptionist's desk. No one knew he was there. One day in October, he moved to a shelf. And suddenly, he was on display.

"We can have fish?" asked someone in editorial.

"Yes," replied the receptionist.

It was perfectly reasonable, taking into account the fact that there is often more than one dog trotting around the office, but no one had though of having an office fish before then.

That same day, the editorial department ordered "Bernie's Betta Cove" (a one-gallon tank with a little plastic podium, a lighted hood, and an air-bubble filter) and a packet of "Grow Your Own" aquarium plants. Once the tank arrived, all that was needed was a trip to New York City's New World Aquarium to stock the tank with some high-quality fish. It all started with a little white lie.

"I am starting up a ten-gallon tank," the managing editor said (fish people will never let you put anything but a Betta in something smaller than a ten-gallon tank.)

"Do you have a heater and a filter?" asked the fish expert.

"Of course," fibbed the managing editor, once again.

They talked about nitrogen cycling — how the water in a new fish tank will become toxic in two to six weeks — and discussed the few species of fish that were hardy enough to endure the brutal cycle. In the end, the editorial department had a beautiful tank with six orange and silver Glowlight Tetras and one feisty, blood-red Betta. Although the Betta enjoyed chasing the Tetras around, he never caught them, and it was fascinating to watch them school around like one big fish to evade him.

Swapping Montauk Oceanfront Allows Trump at Jones Beach

By Debbie Tuma

Amsterdam Beach State Park, a 122-acre pristine oceanfront beach in Montauk that was recently acquired jointly by the state, county and Town of East Hampton, is now being divided as part of a swap involving something that's going on at Jones Beach State Park.

New York State is looking to swap six acres of this Montauk beach area in exchange for being allowed to expand the parking area for a new restaurant located at Jones Beach State Park. As a result, the state looked at Montauk and has asked East Hampton Town to look at putting six acres of this oceanfront park under federal jurisdiction.

George Gorman, Regional Director of New York State Parks on Long Island, explained that under the Federal Land and Water Conservation Fund Program, if any parkland is taken from one park, it needs to be replaced in another park. He said at Jones Beach State Park, plans have been underway to replace the deteriorated restaurant that was demolished in 2004. Proposals for a new restaurant were considered, and the one which was selected was a proposal by Steven Carl, owner of Carlisle on the Green at Bethpage State Park, who got financing from Donald Trump to build a new restaurant and catering facility called, "Trump on the Ocean." Construction for this new facility, which will be a partnership between the two developers, should begin in about six months, and it is expected to open by 2009.

Gorman said, "We're expanding the parking field at Jones Beach to accommodate this new restaurant, and also an 18-hole golf course, and we needed to find other parkland to make up for the use of this land." He said, "All of our parks are under this "Land and Water Conservation" agreement. We picked Amsterdam Park because it is our latest acquisition, and so far, no development is being considered for it, and we expect it to remain as it

WILL ZONING BOARDS BOARD UP THE BOARDY BARN?

By T.J. Clemente

Although the reported sale for the legendary bar-hangout "Boardy Barn" in Hampton Bays is dead, there comes the realization that the Sunday hangout for so many different generations over the past 40 years may actually close soon if another buyer is not located. It is just another Hampton's icon shopped because the land it occupies is worth more than the present business on it can earn. It is just another nail in the coffin of what was once small town America.

In Boardy Barn's case, a strip mall was proposed to the planning board, whose members saw more tax revenue and an end to the partying on the site that goes on all summer "like a college homecoming every weekend." The investors withdrew from the purchase when it became obvious that due to the zoning of the property as a "highway business" more parking spaces had to be included in the plan then the investors could put in and justify the cost.

A representative of Anthony Galgano, the owner of Boardy Barn, declared the proposed deal "dead" but said Mr. Galgano is ready to sell should the right offer again come his way.

So that could mean the end of the 40-year summer party on the corner of Old Montauk Highway across from the Hess Station. For years, the tradition was that first time visitors got a mug of beer bath. The bartender at Shagwong in Montauk tells stories of years past when she would go there and walk around in mud made by beer and dirt. She met her first serious boyfriend there, though "he wasn't that serious." Lee Bieler, former owner of the now very dead Blue Parrot, called Boardy Barn, "A wild place, very wild, so many people met so many people there in that lot. It's sad to see it go. God, it's been there forever." The last event held at The Boardy Barn this season was

Who's Here

Deborah Grubman
Realtor

By Dan Rattiner

Deborah Grubman is a charming and beautiful woman, who, along with her husband Alan Grubman, is one of the more powerful figures in the city of New York and in the Hamptons. Alan is an entertainment lawyer. Deborah Grubman is, by many accounts, one of the half dozen most important real estate figures in the city.

This year, Deborah Grubman is the chairman of one of the biggest charity fundraisers in the City, the Rita Hayworth Alzheimer's Gala, to be held at the Waldorf Astoria on November 14. As a result, it seemed a good time to get to know her better. We met in New York and I spent an hour or two with her talking about her life.

Deborah Grubman was born in New York City, and raised in Spring Valley, in Rockland County. Her father worked as an Engineer at IBM for much of his life and holds several patents. And so he would commute from their home the short distance to the IBM facility in Fishkill.

Both of Deborah's parents are Holocaust survivors. Her father was one of the Partisans in Czechoslovakia, and he was arrested and sent to a labor camp. Much of the rest of his family was destroyed. Her mother was from Poland and when the Soviet Army swept through, they arrested her mother's father, whom they considered to be a Capitalist. When he was taken away, his wife and children — among them Deborah's mother — were taken to Siberia, where they were incarcerated for the remainder of the war. Her mother and father met in a Displaced Person's Camp after the war, and they were married in America in 1950.

Deborah went to Spring Valley High School. She was an excellent student and decided she wanted to become a teacher of high school math and science. To that end, she applied and was accepted at SUNY Albany with a full regent's scholarship, where, during her third year, she got married to her first husband.

"After graduation, my husband and I moved to Miami Beach, and then to Los Angeles. He was in the jewelry business, in manufacturing, importing, retail and sales. I had my first child in Miami Beach, the second in Los Angeles. And I gave up teaching. Then, after fifteen years of marriage, we got a divorce. The kids were 9 and 12. I wondered what I would do?"

Deborah had, at that point, already begun to dabble in real estate.

"When we moved to Los Angeles," she said, "I wanted to financially contribute to the family. There were, at that time, a large group of Iranians moving into Beverly Hills. The Shah had been deposed. It seemed like an opportunity for me. So I began, as a hobby and to bring in money, to buy houses, fix them up a bit and flip them at a profit. It certainly did help the family."

Real estate is often about change, about financial changes, about upgrade, about death, marriage and divorce. It is a very pivotal time, sometimes happy or sometimes sad, but for someone like me, always exciting.

The work was fun for Deborah, although for a long time she did not consciously think about why. Soon, however, it became apparent.

"From the time I was little, I enjoyed seeing how people lived.

"I remember in my early twenties, if somebody said would you like to meet at the pub or would you like to come over to the house, I'd always say I'll come over to the house."

There may have been some part of this that was her curiosity, but Deborah also believed the visual cues she saw in someone's home told her a great deal about what people were like. So it gave her confidence to proceed or not to proceed with whatever friendship she had been considering.

"I always liked to look in people's closets," she said.

As for where she should settle with her kids now that she was on her own, she decided to return to New York City. It was where she was from. At the present time, she works with the Corcoran Group.

I asked Deborah what else she liked about the real estate business.

"I like everything about it," she said. "Especially in New York, but everywhere." She proceeded to elaborate. "If I could learn about people from how they lived, I could become even more involved by helping them buy or sell. Real estate is often about change, about financial changes, about upgrade, about death, marriage and divorce. It is a very pivotal time, sometimes happy or sometimes sad, but for someone like me, always exciting.

"There are basically two kinds of people. The collectors who accumulate things. They will fall in love with a house and keep it forever. It is their home and they wouldn't part with it for anything. And they fill it with stuff. Often they are packrats.

"The other kind of person can also be acquisitive, but is less attached to it. If you like something they will sell it to you. They like taking something apart and redoing it, then when the process is over, moving on. They consider what they do as part of a creative process. They are traders. And so you have traders and collectors. As a real estate broker, I try to help both sorts."

In 1989, at a cocktail party celebrating the opening of the Fendi Store on Fifth Avenue, she met Alan Grubman.

"He was smart and he was very funny. He was for me."

The Grubmans live in Manhattan and have a home in East Hampton. If Deborah came to

The only frame of reference I could give you as to what a so-called good bagel tastes like in San Francisco is to say they taste like Lender's Bagels, which are those frozen Styrofoam bagels you used to be able to get in the freezers of unsuspecting grocery stores. They thaw and they turn to goo. You toast them and they turn back to Styrofoam. That is your typical San Francisco bagel.

And then there was my recent visit to San Francisco, and I am hurrying home with the good news. Or at least the not-bad news.

A friend of my daughter's named Kelly dropped by for brunch when I was there bearing a bag of bagels for our breakfast. I was disappointed, of course, but I feigned delight and surprise. Bagels!

"These are not bad," I said, after biting into one. "Something has happened."

"What?" Kelly asked.

"These are better than the bagels I had last time I was here."

My daughter concurred.

"We always have nice bagels," Kelly said. She's San Francisco born and raised.

"Nice bagels are hard and crunchy on the outside," my daughter said, "and soft and feathery on the inside. If you toast them and then break them open, steam comes out."

Kelly listened. She was apparently amazed.

"On a scale of from one to ten, these are about a five," I said, instantly realizing I had exhibited bad manners to somebody who brought a gift. "But they're better than the one or two that they used to be," I continued. "Something's changed. They're onto something."

"Something what?" Kelly asked.

I let it go at that. I went back to a couple of bagel stores I'd been to before, later in the week. The better bagels were in some places, but not others. They're moving slowly into the neighborhood. It's like half the town has gotten the first half to the secret of Coca Cola.

Next trip, I am going to try some more. I'll report back. I'll even go back up to Noah's, and see if I can schlep a conversation with somebody. If I find out something new that they know, I'll let you know.

Some day I'll writer about what television used to be like out here in the Hamptons. This was before Pay Per View, before On Demand, before Satellite, before Cable, even before Color TV. Here in the Hamptons, the only channels we could get were Channel 3 and 8 out of Connecticut and, on a good day Channel 12 out of Providence, Rhode Island. We became experts about what was going on in southern New England, which was an utterly useless waste.

I don't know how we got along. • looting or riots upon the announcement of the tax increase to the 40 homes. Maybe with an average value of $2.2 million of each the homeowners can afford it. More likely they don't even know about it yet. And it is a brilliant tax increase because more money is being collected for absolutely no services. I am sure both Professor Hinton and Machiavelli would be impressed. The Wing Foot Golf Club Board should also be informed perhaps they could raise greens fees for the non-golfing members. The last note of this story is that if you buy a home on a road called Town Line Road always make sure which side and to which town your school district taxes go. The beauty of the situation was reported by Mr. Dominic Annacone, District Superintendent, of Wainscott. "The disturbing thing about the whole thing is that we got no notification whatsoever. I just don't see us losing (Wainscott school district) that amount of taxes. If we have to we will litigate it, it's too big a sum." But what about the Sagaponack 40 who just got the school tax increase, who cares about them?

the party with two kids, so did Alan. Today, all four are out of college and either starting or proceeding on their own careers. The eldest is a girl who is married and expecting and owns her own public relations firm. The second, also a girl, is an attorney who advises charitable organization, and is about to have twins

"I'm about to become a grandmother three times in one year!" Deborah said, happily interrupting her survey.

"The third, a boy, is in the real estate business in Los Angles. And the youngest, another girl, is a writer in Manhattan who just produced a book about Walking Tours of New York."

It is all-together a very successful family.

Deborah became involved with the Alzheimer's Gala after being approached by Yasmin Aga Kahn, whose mother Rita Hayworth, died from this dreadful disease.

"That was fifteen years ago," Deborah said. "I joined the Committee. And we've been raising money ever since to try to wipe it out. Probably half of all Americans will suffer from this disease by age 85. It hasn't been wiped out."

Come to the gala, a formal affair, white tie and tails, on Tuesday evening November 14 at the Waldorf.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Spear's Divorce

Well, that's it, I'm never getting married. If Britney Spears and Kevin Federline can't make it all the way through, then who the heck can? I really didn't see this coming, it was a match made in heaven. I mean what was more perfect then the marriage between the two of them?

I know, I know, you were shocked just like me when I heard the news. It was all right there on the front page of CNN.COM when I heard about it. The Dan's Papers office started going bananas.

"Did you hear the big news? It's unbelievable!" Somebody cried out in horror.

I'm thinking North Korea declared nuclear war against the U.S. I'm thinking another terrorist attack. I'm thinking an outbreak of a flesh eating flu virus.

"BRITNEY SPEARS IS GETTING DIVORCED FROM KEVIN FEDERLINE!"

"NO WAY!" I cried in horror. How could this be? Kevin seemed like such a nice, charming, smart gentleman.

In all seriousness, nearly all of us saw this coming only like five thousand miles away. Britney and Kevin were doomed from the beginning and everybody seemed to know it, mainly because Kevin is the perfect scumbag, if you think about it. And now Brit is back on the market. Hmmmm……

You know something, I'm going to be honest with you. Now that Britney is back on the market, I'm not really all that excited about it. I don't know if it is her own fault or not, but now that she is available, I'm not really all that excited about it. I'm not so sure teenaged boys (and teenaged-minded men) are going to rejoice all that much. We are all kind of over her. But nevertheless, we are at least going to turn our heads around and see what she is going to do with herself now that she is free. A shot for a make out session with Britney Spears while listening to "Oops I Did It Again" would be hard to pass up.

I'm sure that all of us are going to see a photo of her in the tabloids in the next couple of weeks with headlines like, "What About The Children?" or "Who's Fault Was It?"

You know who is next, don't you? Tom and Katie are next for sure. Absolutely for sure. And let's not forget about Brad, that's going to go too, I don't care what any of you say. Divorce today seems to be just a part of marriage, at least a celebrity marriage. Even my idols Seinfeld and Billy Joel have been divorced.

I was recently at my cousin's wedding that was truly a match made in heaven and I truly believe that the two of them will be able to make it through a lifetime of marriage. Which really got me thinking about celebrity marriages. They are all doomed, every single one of them. No, that's not true. I remember seeing Kyra Sedgwick and Kevin Bacon and thinking to myself that they were perfect together. I feel the same way about Sarah Jessica Parker and Matthew Broderick.

But all of the other ones, I wouldn't be surprised to see fall apart. Not even a little.

I wonder if Britney will turn super hot again in the same way that Jessica Simpson was suddenly on the mind of every guy after divorcing Nick Lachey. Wouldn't that be weird? What would be even weirder is if the two pop stars became man-haters together and toured. I'd buy tickets to that concert in a second.

Does the guy get rich in a divorce if the wife is rich? Like, does Kevin get half of Britney's stuff or does that only happen when the guy has money? I'm no divorce lawyer.

I can tell you this. Kevin's divorce from Britney Spears was the stupidest career decision he could have possibly made, considering the fact that his marriage to Britney was his entire career. It was the only thing this guy seemed to have going for him!

They say that he had a music album out with a lot of curse words. Well, good luck selling that thing now. Everybody knows that when it rains it pours for guys and it sure was raining on Kevin when he married Britney. He landed a record deal and the whole thing all because teenaged girls liked the idea of him being married to Britney and wondered what it was that she saw in him. But now it's going to be over for him in my opinion, and the reason is because once one girl ditches you, the rest follow, including music fans.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages. Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find.

The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

The day the editorial department's fish arrived, the production department took a field trip and returned with two one-gallon tanks similar to "Bernie's Betta Cove," and put two goldfish in one, and a myriad of colorful fish, plants, and plastic rocks in the other. While many fish in the crowded tank perished that night, two dyed Glassfish survived, and remain there to this very day.

All was well at Dan's Aquarium until one terrible morning, when the editorial department arrived to see three little Glowlight Tetras swimming around nervously, where six had been the night before. Although the Betta was initially blamed, the perfect condition, save a few white fuzzy spots, of the other three Tetras became his alibi. The fish expert's parting words came to mind; "if you see little spots on them, you know the water is too cold."

During the day, the thermometer read 78 degrees — plenty warm enough for Tetras and Bettas. But who knew how cold the tank got at night when no one was there? Did they freeze to death? A three-gallon Eclipse System 3, with a built-in, full-spectrum light and bio-wheel filter, was ordered immediately, along with some plastic hiding plants and a heater.

As soon as the new tank arrived, the three remaining Glowlight Tetras and the Betta moved in. The water was crystal clear and the heater was set to a balmy 78 degrees. But the tank seemed empty. The Betta lurked in the corner hidden by plants, and the tree Tetras seemed lonely and out of place. With no time to get back to the City, some local fish from Pet Hampton and Aquarium made their way into the big tank, including a nurse shark-like Pleco, three Neon Tetras, one Black Neon, and one Orange Neon.

The next morning, four beautiful plants had sprouted from the "Grow Your Own" bulbs. But all was not well. The Black Neon and two of the Neon Tetras were missing, and the three original Glowlight Tetras still had white spots. Worst of all, the remaining Neon Tetra was chasing the Betta and biting his fins. In a word: Chaos.

Another trip to the city, this time to Petco, yielded assurance that the Tetra deaths had been the product of erratic nitrogen levels, and that 82 degrees would be a much better temperature for tropical fish than 78. Six Black Neons and one Bolivian Ram later, the new tank was more beautiful than anyone had imagined. Further on-line research suggested that the ideal temperature for this group would be 80 degrees, and at this temperature, with the pesky Neon moved to production's goldfish tank, the new ecosystem thrived. The Betta, Ram and Pleco swam together and the little Tetras schooled happily, despite their color differences, and everyone's colors and spirits seemed brighter than before.

The next morning, however, the office witnessed a grim sight. Our happy little Ram lay pale and listless, jammed into the corner of the big tank behind the heater and the filter. Every few minutes, the Betta would swim over, flare his face shield, and take a vicious bite out of the little Ram's fins. The Ram had become the office favorite, with his cute little upturned mouth, pink-tipped Mohawk and all-over-the-tank swimming antics. This was the last straw.

"Bernie's Betta Cove" was quickly rinsed and filled, and the Big Bad Betta was put into isolation. Permanently.

As soon as the Big Bad Betta was gone, the little Ram crawled out of the corner and rested in the middle of the tank, fluttering his shredded fins in relief. The Pleco reappeared from behind the plants and began to clean the gravel, and the Tetras stopped schooling and swam freely. The tyrant had fallen; democracy reigned at last.

Currently, the Big Bad Betta is looming around in his very own tank, the Black Neon Tetras and Glowlight Tetra are healthy and happy, and The Pleco is still frantically trying to make everything neat and tidy. As someone in editorial eloquently remarked, setting up a fish tank is a bit like playing God. It's a big job, but once the initial hardships are overcome, being able to take a snorkeling break in mid-winter without leaving your desk is worth every minute and dollar it took to get there.

Review (continued frompage 22)

This new film tackles the old issue of racism. Yet as the film points out, an old issue is not necessarily an obsolete one. The racism France's lead character encounters on his return to his rural Georgia hometown is still strong. France's strength lies in depicting the unforeseen ways in which racism affects all the individuals in its vicinity. By showing the manifestations of racism on specific, well-developed characters, France manages to tell a haunting story through which the ramifications of hate are organically revealed.

Another painful story was that of the short film When Does It Stop, directed by Derek Koen. The film, which portrays the cycle of violence and suffering brought about by a shooting between teens, was included in the festival as a message of caution for the young adult audience.

Those too young for such graphic matter had their own films to enjoy. Two Children and Family selections were shown in the early afternoon: The Journey of Henry Box Brown, directed by Karyn Parsons and Kirikou and the Sorceress by Michel Ocelot.

Also shown was the 1936 spiritual musical Green Pastures, directed by Marc Connelly and William Keighley. The movie, a string of Old Testament stories performed as imagined by black Sunday-school children in the south, is so rich in stereotypes that Warner Home Video has attached a disclaimer acknowledging the social and political climate of the time. The film was included in the festival for this look at stereotypes and black history. An effective choice: the scene of God embarking on genesis after being inspired by a cup of chowder at the Southern fish fry is quite an insight into the history of black film.

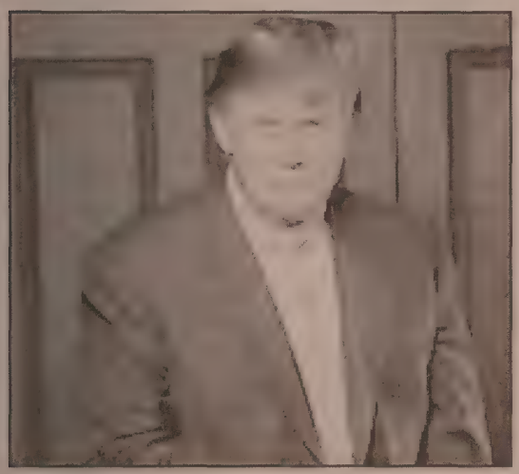
is, except for possibly some parking access in the future."

He said the Town, County and State are still developing a management plan for Amsterdam Beach State Park, but that it "should remain a passive parkland."

This park at Amsterdam Beach, which totals 122 acres, is located along the ocean, nestled between Shadmoor State Park and Rheinstein Estate Park to the west, and Camp Hero State Park to the east. It is also close to the Nature Conservancy's Andy Warhol Visual Arts Preserve.

Gorman, who has seen this property first-hand, said, "It's a beautiful woodland area with bluffs, rocks and beachfront property, but right now there is no public access or parking. There may be in the future. Now it is used primarily by fisherman, hikers, and naturalists. Down the road we might need more access."

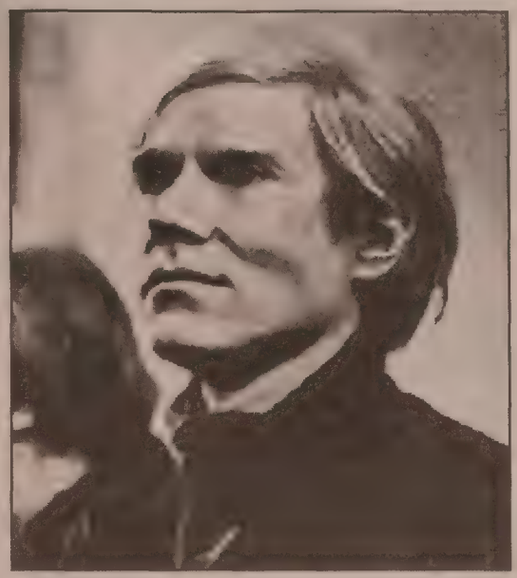


Bob DeLuca, President of the Group For the South Fork, an environmental protection organization located in Bridgehampton, said he hoped Amsterdam Beach State Park would be preserved. "It is clearly a significant parcel and an important acquisition to be protected for its wetlands, ocean beaches and endangered species. Its recent acquisition was a success story, and we just want to make sure this swap doesn't endanger its future," he explained.

DeLuca said, "It's a partnership acquisition, between the state, county and town, so we want to make sure everyone is on the same page about its future. My greatest concern would be if anything would open up its potential for development, but I've only recently learned of this "swap idea," so I need to learn more."

So far, the monetary division of the Amsterdam Beach acquisition has resulted in $4 million being contributed by New York State, $5.5 million by Suffolk County, and $7 million by the Town of East Hampton, which included over $6 million from the Community Preservation Fund, and about $1 million from a Federal grant.

This oceanfront land was jointly acquired by these government entities after its owners planned to subdivide it into house lots. Several auctions were cancelled as negotiations proceeded. It is surrounded by over 2,400 protected acres to the east, west and north. On October 19, The East Hampton Town Board also approved a $9 million acquisition for a 26-acre piece of land west of Amsterdam Beach, called "Amsterdam Beach II."



Meanwhile, as Donald Trump and Steven Carl build their proposed restaurant and catering facility in Jones Beach State Park, some controversy has resulted over a fear about it being too big. But Gorman said this week that, "This restaurant meets the regulations and they plan to also keep its historic character intact. It is being designed like the restaurants that we previously had there."

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #423

I recently learned that three of my over 38 friends are pregnant for the first time. To them I say, you really have to stop drinking. You just jumped off the career track for the next ten years. Welcome to Mommyland...here are the guidelines:

1. Husband has to sleep in the barn until the vasectomy heals.

2. If he insists you have a natural, drug-free childbirth, you insist that he has a natural, drug-free vasectomy.

3. The last book you read is the last book you will read for years to come.

4. All of a sudden, you will see strollers and pregnant women everywhere.

5. With a baby in diapers, you will not know who you are, where you are, or what day it is till 2020. You will not remember when you last changed your underwear or when you last brushed your teeth.

6. Your life as an educated, intelligent adult with something to contribute is over. You will develop that secret lobe of the female brain, the Motherlobe, where you will store the motherload of Mommy knowledge. You will know all the words to Wee Sing videos and all the songs to every Disney movie. Your exercise will be limited to fetching items for the kids, running to save things from being thrown in the toilet, and speed packing diaper bags.

7. Pick a Soap Opera. Your days will be so repetitious that you will rely on a soap opera to help you keep track of what day it is, to provide the sound of adult conversation in the background so you don't lose your ability to converse, and to remind you that sometime in the future, you will be able to wear clean clothes again, just like they do on TV.

8. Remember that most parenting books were written by men who were never in the trenches! I refuse to listen to their advice because they have never experienced the unrelenting aggravation and fatigue that Moms live with 26 hours a day. No, not 24 hours, you have to add 2 extra hours for Moms with infants or they'll get no sleep at all.

9. Truth be told, if those kids are alive when your hubby walks through the door at 5 p.m., you have done your job... Parenting books make good wedges to level a tippy table. If you want to use a parenting book for parenting purposes, attach it to a stick first to create a nice flat paddle.

10. Welcome to fast food. You will have every fast food menu and prices memorized in no time.

11. Cooking will now be limited to whatever can be made in a crock pot or in one pan, nothing will have more than four ingredients or need more than salt and pepper for seasoning.

12. I can't explain this, but when a woman becomes a mother, the husband unconsciously de-evolves into a son. Suddenly, they can't help around the house, they can't watch the kids, can't wash their clothes or figure out how to get dishes to the sink. I call it Baby Envy. They resent all the attention you give to the baby, so they compete by becoming helpless. Think I'm kidding? Have you ever left your hubby written instructions on microwaving a Hungry Man dinner so you could go out one evening? Written instructions for child care that included the kids' bedtimes, and emergency phone numbers?

13. Get ready to hear, "You're not working, you're home with kids," over and over. Ask that person to baby-sit for you someday. Stay away from the house until they offer you enough money to come back.

14. Put a soft light in the bathroom. Stand naked in front of the mirror. Say a fond farewell to any remaining firmness in your boobs or flatness for your stomach. All the sacrifices you made in the line of beauty are now moot. Men love to show off a good scar they got in combat, there's a kind of prestige to a good scar. Too bad society won't give us credit for stretch marks as mark of pride for having grown a new person. The old Soviet Union used to give a medal to women who had eight or more children who lived to adulthood. I'd give a medal to any woman who went through eight pregnancies!

15. Thought you'd never become a frazzled Mom? Never be caught dead running into a store with dirty clothes and your hair looking like hell? Welcome to the club, honey.

The Russian Tea Room has reopened. It has been closed since the late Warner LeRoy bought it in 1992 and after spending a staggering $32 million in a failed attempted to make it a sort of mate with his wildly successful Tavern on the Green, lived to see it closed down again. The reopening of the restaurant, unknown to the new owners, took place on November 3, which unknown to the owner was the first anniversary of the motorcycle death of Warner's son Max in an accident in Hollywood. The LeRoys homestead in Amagansett on Town Line Road has been chopped up into six grand McMansions surrounding the family's famous homestead.

the All Hampton Bays All Class reunion held October 14th. It started at 7 p.m. and officially closed at 11 p.m. However, rumor has it there are still six cars abandoned on the site because the owners still are not sure where they parked. The big tent with the teal stripes always let one know that a party was going to happen on the grounds.

However, all this may come to a close if the right price is met. Jeff V. Murphee, the planning and developing administrator for Southampton Town, reportedly claims that surveys done recently have the local residents saying the Boardy Barn property should be redeveloped and linked to the neighboring Wild by Nature shopping complex. Perhaps this group was not the most sentimental to the parties held at the Boardy Barn. One former patron said it best. "I met my wife there except at the time she was someone else's wife."

PARANORMAL RESEARCH IN THE HAMPTONS

By Sabrina C. Mashburn

A few Sundays ago, I attended the Long Island Society for Paranormal Research's second lecture in its history. Because the library in Sag Harbor where the lecture took place was recently deemed by the Society to be haunted by at least three spirits, this event was almost guaranteed to be the most entertaining activity to partake in at two p.m. on a Sunday. The lecturer, Alexis Camarda — nanny, student, paranormal investigator and media consultant — is a lovely 24-year-old girl who had not actually communicated with spirits herself, but has the utmost respect for the Long Island Society's "scientifical methods."

I arrived a few minutes late, and entered the room in the middle of an explanation of the photographic phenomenon known as Ghostly Orbs. Apparently, when a ghost has his or her picture taken, they will appear as a bright, round orb, with an appearance strikingly similar to those blemishes on photographs where a speck of dust or water droplet has found its way onto the negative. Traveling orbs, which form either when the ghost is moving or when a spirit is trying to form, resemble the mark left when an eyelash or other thin fibre has gotten onto the negative. The orbs were quite impressive, as was our lecturer's "debunking" of other Paranormal Societies' photographs, which often cite semi-transparent "dust orbs" as actual ghost orbs, which the Long Island Society has found to be more opaque. One little lecture attendee asked Ms. Camarda what an Orb actually was, to which the lecturer responded, "It is any round shape really."

After the orb discussion, we moved on to Paranormal Mist, which is the breath-in-the-cold-like trail or cloud left by a ghost who is trying to form. Ms. Camarda showed us how, although the mist looks identical to someone's breath or cigarette smoke, actual ghost-mist does not come from the side of the picture, but is centered in the frame of the picture. She then showed us how her fellow investigator had used Photoshop to overlay his own cigarette smoke on a photograph to create a ghost-mist-like effect. She assured us that none of their other photographs had been retouched in order to enhance the ghosts' appearances.

The third method of ghostly detection presented was EVP, or Electronic Voice Phenomena, wherein the ghost uses the "white noise" of a tape recorder to construct its own voice (because ghosts don't have vocal chords) and utters one or two garbled, breathy syllables, occasionally in response to a question posed by an investigator. Although most of the EVPs sound much like a live, human exhalation, once Ms. Camarda told us what the ghost was trying to say, it became mush easier to distinguish their words. The curious nature of these sounds is that they are not audible to the human ear at the time of the recording, and are only evident when they are magnified many times on a tape.

Although Ms. Camarda has never made contact with a ghost herself, she told us that she had heard footsteps and been "poked in the hip" by a ghost while sleeping with a friend in a haunted hotel room. Unfortunately, Ms. Camarda did not see the ghost because she was frightened of uncovering her face and "seeing some little ghost-boy in the corner." Ms. Camarda's assistant, George Mendoza, however, related one of his own recent experiences with the paranormal; he earnestly told me that when he was providing the music for a funeral at the Catholic Church where he works, he felt a hand rest on top of his, and then, moments later, the granddaughter of the deceased began to weep, unprovoked. Mr. Mendoza believes that the girl's grandmother was saying goodbye to her family during the funeral, and had placed her hand on top of his to thank him for providing her with such beautiful accompaniment.

Although she was not present, Jaret Segovia's name came up many times in the lecture. As the "sensitive" of the society, Jaret can sometimes feel, see or hear spirits. Although the scientifically photographic and tape-recording methods have never supported Jaret's feelings, the thermometers sometimes spike or drop in the same region where she believes a ghost to be. Jaret has been seeing ghosts throughout her life. Although she says that she is never told the history of an investigation site, she often knows the histories of those who have passed on in a house as soon as she enters, and exhibits strong emotions when she enters a space where tragedies have taken place.

When Jaret entered the John Jermain Memorial Library in Sag Harbor, she began to laugh as she sensed the spirits of two little boys playing on the children's floor and running around her; she also sensed an adult man standing in a corner of the library's basement. And, though the librarian admitted to requesting the investigation of the library because she "wanted to do a program like this for Halloween," she also said that she and the other librarians have often felt like they were "being watched" when they were alone in the library.

When I asked the Society's director, Peter Franz, why he believes that a spirit would haunt a house or cemetery in the hopes of being photographed or taped, he explained "everyone's like a battery, everyone has their own energy. When we die, what becomes of that energy?" Other more historical and revered experts have echoed this sentiment, utilizing proven scientific methods to determine that not only can energy be neither created nor destroyed, but that the human body loses exactly 21 grams of weight at the moment when life is lost. While it seems difficult to fathom that these 21 grams could speak to a tape recorder, or turn into a swirling orb of light when the camera flashes, it is not so far-fetched to think that this weight, this energy, lingers somehow.

The Long Island Society for Paranormal Research conducts investigations free-of-charge; if you believe your home or office to be inhabited by spirits, please visit www.lispr.com to arrange a meeting.

Go-Karts vs. Horses

A Horse Farm And Go-Kart Track Butt Heads Over Land Use. Compromise?

By David Lion Rattiner

Some like the gallop of a friendly horse and the bond that develops. Others like the sound of a go-cart engine that runs on jet fuel, racing around a track at sixty miles an hour. The Riverhead Town Board unanimously accepted a DEIS, or a draft environmental impact statement that is in support of F1 Long Island's (a go-kart racing company) plans to build a go-kart track on Edwards Avenue in Calverton.

Go-kart racing is, in a sort of comical way, a very competitive sport. Drivers get strapped into a very small and very light vehicle with an incredibly low center of gravity that shoots people around a track. It is a hobby for many people and families and brings people together in a way that a hockey rink can.

But it's not east building a go-kart track these days, especially on Long Island and even more especially in Suffolk County, and even more especially then that, on the North Fork. Environmentalists don't like any kind of development and in general, you have to have a really, really good idea that will bring a significant amount of money while at the same time keep the integrity of the area in order to accomplish any kind of development.

But after the DEIS document was accepted, a horse farmer got agitated by its acceptance. For two reasons really: Reason number one is that Robin Gibbs, the part owner of Mil-Ridge Farm, has property adjacent to where they want to build the go-kart track, and reason number two is that he probably isn't a go-kart fan.

But in all seriousness, she is really afraid that the noise from the go-karts are going to affect her animals. There is a real fear that the horses will go crazy from the noise and have to be tranquilized to calm them down. And what happens if a person is riding a horse and the noise spooks them and knocks the rider off. Who is liable in that situation? These are some real points that a farm owner needs to know about from a meeting like this. It's the whole purpose of a meeting on these matters. Will the farm go under as the go-karts zoom around? Will people even want their horses at the farm?

And so, Mil-Ridge Farm and its lawyer is saying that the meeting held to approve the DEIS document was held illegally, because not enough notice for the meeting was given. Although the Town did post the meeting on the website, it wasn't published in the Town's official newspaper because it was announced just days before it was held, which meant that the Mil-Ridge attorney was unable to attend the meeting to voice their opinions, which gives them some much-needed leverage in this situation.

How does something like this happen so close to a farm on the North Fork? Well the development rights to the property were actually purchased from Riverhead Town from the farm owner so that she could continue farming four years ago. We are talking about 29 acres of a 43-acre farm here. Where is the sense in purchasing the rights "to save the farm" when you are going to use the development rights to put the farm out of business. Doesn't make to much sense if you ask me.

But we here at Dan's Papers are problem solvers, not problem makers and so we have figured out some solutions. Some real, some not so real.

Real Solution #1- Keep the racetrack far away from the horse farm. We are talking about 29 acres here. Build the racetrack on the furthest lot of land, away from the horse farm and keep 20 acres of open space in between the racetrack and the horse farm. Have Riverhead own the rights to development on those acres, but sign something that says they will never develop it.

Real Solution #2- Make the racetrack indoors. This way it can operate in the wintertime as well and also make it less noisy. It's doable.

Fake Solution #1- Have a the owner of F-1 get on a horse and have the owner of the Mil-Ridge farm get on a go-kart and let them race around a track. The winner gets what they want, no questions asked.

Real Solution #3- Have part of the profit from the F-1 race track go to the Mil-Ridge farm to pay for the lost business and the general annoyance of having a F-1 race track as a neighbor.

Real Solution #4- Put super silent mufflers on all of the go-karts or make all of them electric.

Fake Solution #2- Have the owner of Mil-Ridge farm put her horse stables on the border of the race track and get all of her horses to do "their business" there. This ought to bring some negotiating back to the table.

The Bachelor Finds His Roots In Cutchogue

Love For A Prince Can Be Tough To Find, But His Families Wine Isn't

By T.J. Clemente

Love is a very splendid thing. It is love that brings us to a delightful North Fork winery and the romantic story behind the husband and wife owners, Prince Marco and Anne Marie Borghese of the Castello di Borghese in Cutchogue. It is the vineyard that once belonged to Alex and Louisa Hargrave and is today one of the most recognizable vineyards on the North Fork. Prince Marco and his lovely wife Anne Marie first met when she was applying for a job. Now of course she has a different job at the wonderful vineyard.

At the moment, the cousin to Prince Marco, Prince Lorenzo Borghese is in fact the finalist, in search of his future princess, on the ABC television series, "The Bachelor." A tidbit of trivia is that Prince Fernando, Marco's son who works in advertising in Philadelphia was also being considered for the role but Lorenzo got the nod.

The Castello di Borghese has a relaxed continental flare that is personified by the way the proprietors have vintage barrels elegantly stacked on a truck on the roadway inviting all to come in and toast love. The wine tasting's are elegant and the Pinot Noir Reserve is wonderful and is on the wine list at the American Hotel in Sag Harbor as well as other fine quality establishments.

As Thanksgiving approaches, the anniversary of when Anne Marie and Prince Marco visited the Hargrave Winery in 1998 approaches. The story goes that the Prince looked at his wife and was in love. He said that he would simply like to "buy it." His wife thought he meant the bottle of wine he was holding and not the whole winery, but buy it he did and thus introduced his style of life into the processing of the wine. Simplicity is a theme to their existence, the idea of being able to make the time to take the time to "smell the roses." However now after eight years of bringing their wonderful smiles, love and wine to the North Fork the couple has put the Castello di Borghese vineyard up for sale. They stress that the sale is not a fire sale but a business decision to entertain offers at the correct price. The last eight years have been so very special to the couple and they only put the vineyard up for sale to pursue other lifetime goals and not be tried down to all the detail and labors of running Castello di Borghese the only way they knew how first class.

As for their nephew and the hit show, "The Bachelor," the girls that are pursuing the young Prince Lorenzo are on a quest for love and royalty.

Because of the nature of the show, Lorenzo does not have to do anything in order to find his love. The girls come after him.

With all this love in the air, and with the notoriety of "The Bachelor," the vineyard has created a special "Year Of Romance" gift set featuring Prince Lorenzo's favorite wines. Also in the package is a 2007 date book with romantic quotes and ideas, and of course a single rose. Prince Lorenzo may be able to vote off the show any girl he feels like, but we can assure you that he gives a thumbs up to his families wine.

Can We Handle It?

What Will The North Fork Do With 300,000,000 People?

By Phyllis Lombardi

Three hundred million are in the United States and sometimes it feels like they are all here on the North Fork's Main Road from Riverhead to Orient.

There are now more than 300,000,000 people in the United States according to the Census Bureau. A baby is born every 11 seconds in this country and by the time you finish reading this, there'll be – you figure it out.

Follow the math. It's just arithmetic, really. If there are ten towns on the North Fork, then each town would hold/host 7,500,000 cars – or 30,000,000 people, give or take a few newborns, should all three hundred million show up for a day.

All these cars, all these people, might be rough going for tiny Orient, even though they've plenty of experience with ferry traffic. But for near-metropolis Mattituck, it would be a breeze. Thirty million people? No problem.

With luck, your 30,000,000 people-drive through Mattituck will be speedy – perhaps only five hours. Mattituck is certainly equipped to make those hours pleasant. There are dozens of diversions as you idle along Main Road.

Eating is a diversion, of course, and Mattituck McDonald's manager, Carrie Kratz, says they're ready to feed the crowds. They sell hundreds of burgers each day as it is. And who keeps track of the coffee – and the refills? No, you won't go hungry in Mattituck. For dessert? Ice cream at Magic Fountain. They've 33 flavors and they'll scoop out just as long as there's a crowd waiting. Thirty million is a crowd.

But we don't want Grandma and Gramps waiting on that long line. They can head to the Human Resource Center (fondly known as the Senior Center) on Pacific Street, just off Main Road. Eat lunch there, play some bingo, whatever. The five-hour stopover will go quickly.

You're not hungry? Check out one of the movies at the Mattituck Cinema on Main Road. They have eight theaters, so you'll find a film you haven't seen. When you leave the theater, traffic may be moving. All we need is Bing and Bob to have our very own road show.

Is all this stress giving you a headache? Go to Barker's Pharmacy on Love Lane for some aspirin. Or go to one of two chain pharmacies on Main Road. While you're there, get some disposable diapers. For one of those kids born 11 seconds ago.

All well and good. Five hours on Mattituck's Main Road may be survivable but what happens if there's an incident requiring a longer stay, perhaps overnight? It's hard to leave the light on for 30,000,000 people. Mattituck does have a motel or two and several B&Bs. But not enough, even if folks slept four to a bed and only in 30-minute shifts. It's inevitable. Thirty million people will be snoring away in cars jamming midnight Mattituck.

In the morning they'll emerge, clothes disheveled, dispositions cranky. Since it's Sunday, some may head for Mattituck churches. Ministers will beam, believing upwards of 30,000,000 people attending services must be a miracle of some sort.

Those millions who choose the less righteous path may head to the Mattituck Main Road Laundry to spruce up a bit. This laundry has 31 washing machines and 40 dryers (why the discrepancy I don't know). It doesn't matter. You'll have to share the washing machine with a stranger anyway.

From the inventory of goods and services available in Mattituck, I'm sure you see why I'm confident the town can accommodate 300,000,000 people. Even more. Quite possibly little Orient could sent its overflow back to Mattituck. Although Orient has the Candyman and which one of the 30,000,000 would want to leave that sweet spot?

Well, it will all work out. No matter what the Census Bureau sends our way, the North Fork can handle it.

OVER THE BARREL...

As If We Needed Another Reason

Unless you've been living under a rock somewhere, you know that red wine offers a multitude of health benefits. In moderation of course. If you pickle your liver through constantly marinating it in local merlot, the other health benefits won't mean much.

But, assuming your wine drinking is moderate — a glass or two a day — the benefits are seemingly endless, with new proof of wine-as-health tonic uncorked every few months.

Consider this.....

Red wine is heart friendly. An estrogen-like antioxidant called resveratrol supposedly blocks cholesterol oxidation, lowering your risk for heart disease.

Red wine consumption can help lower your cholesterol. Glucose-based plant compounds found in red wine — saponins — are believed to bind to cholesterol and prevent its absorption.

Red wine may help fight Parkinson's Disease. Scientists in Milan say that a glass and a half of wine a day could help improve brain function and stop the progression of brain disorders. That wonder antioxidant, resveratrol apparently increases brain enzyme by up to seven fold.

Red wine fights cancer, too. Resveratrol also helps prevent cancer cells from reproducing according to Danish scientists. It can even protect your skin from bad sunburn and melanoma.

Red wine can even help fend off the common cold. Spanish scientists have found evidence that drinking a glass of wine every day can lead to 44% fewer colds.

Now, scientists at Harvard Medical School and the National Institute on Aging have shown that an extract of resveratrol has a fountain-of-youth effect on mice. Tests on monkeys are next.

This much is clear — red wine is good for you. Drink it. Again, in moderation.

But, I'd never advocate drinking just any old red wine. You might as well drink something that tastes good while you're at it. Don't bother with mass-produced wines with little character.

So, while you're helping your heart, head and nose, enjoy quality, hand-crafted wines from local wineries. You'll be doing yourself — and the local industry — some good.

Wineries like Lenz Winery, Paumanok Vineyards, Bedell Cellars, Roanoke Vineyards and Raphael make some of the best. Taste through their merlots, cabernet sauvignons and cabernet francs, you're bound to find at least one you like, and probably one that you'll love. These are world-class wines that are just now garnering the respect they deserve.

So there you have it. Another reason to drink red wine. Me, I have more than enough reasons already.

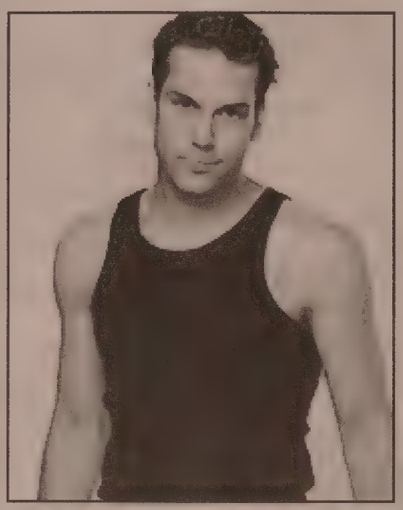
When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

NY Comedy Festival

This weather is no fun. As I said two weeks ago, I love the fall, but now it's November and to my poor, vulnerable body the cold feels like February. Less than a year has passed since last winter. My warped memory is sure to hit me with a big, painful shot of reality when the truly frigid months once again appear on the calendar. The point, my friends, is that it's a bit early for the winter doldrums, but if you're like I am, you're already feeling them. I've noticed some long faces and frowns that need to be turned upside down. Last night I spent the evening hanging out with a buddy of mine. We told stories, drew pictures and watched Art School Confidential – a hilarious movie. It was a nice night. We laughed a lot. As people get older and the stress and responsibilities of life take over, big belly laughs and even little, unstoppable giggles seem to be an increasingly rare commodity. So, to my friend – thanks for the chuckle.



Comedian Dane Cook

After last night it occurred to me that laughter is important. And lo and behold, as I was trying to decide what to write about this week, I turned to an advertisement for the New York Comedy Festival in Time Out New York magazine. It's the perfect cure for the seasonal blues. The festival runs from November 7th through the 12th, spans a number of great venues, and is hosting some of the best and brightest comics working today. I recently spoke with Bill McCuddy, a veteran stand-up comic now working as entertainment correspondent for FOX News. "The festival gets much better every year," he said. Of the seminars and symposiums such as Saturday's "How To Tell A Joke – And, How Not To," McCuddy quipped, "You might be a sitcom waiting to happen, once you learn to be funny." He's made a career out of his humor and quick wit, and was quick to point out that today "Funny is Money." "When a movie like Borat is likely to earn $25-30 million on its opening weekend, comedy is serious business." McCuddy, of course, is right. But whether or not you want to attend the festival's lectures and learn the craft is secondary to the fun and release of checking out some top-notch acts.

By the time you read this, it will be day three into the festival. You've already missed Tuesday's "Roasted, Battered, and Fried," where celebrity chef Mario Batali endured a roast by some of the most brutal comics in the industry. Wednesday featured "Comedy Cares For the Homeless," a benefit for the homeless, with performances by, among others, Paula Poundstone (regularly featured on my favorite NPR show, "Wait, Wait, Don't Tell Me"), and "The Biggest Loser" host Caroline Rhea. Tonight (Thursday), if you can make into town on time, pioneer of the neo-genie look and host of NBC's hit show "Deal or No Deal," Howie Mandel will be waxing comedic at Town Hall at 8 p.m. If you prefer the drunk and un-showered, resident funnyman of "The Howard Stern Show," Artie Lange, competes with Mandel's 8 p.m. slot at Carnegie Hall. Friday will also provide an 8 p.m. time slot face-off. This time you'll choose between "Rescue Me" star and hugely popular actor/comedian Denis Leary at Lincoln Center's Avery Fisher Hall, and "Opie & Anthony" regular Jim Norton at the Hammerstein Ballroom. Norton can be pretty funny, but I can guess which one of these shows will sell out first.

On Saturday night, the show to see is "An Evening with Mario Cantone" at 8 p.m. at Town Hall. Cantone is now most recognized for his outrageously funny stand-up act and a recurring role on HBO's "Sex and the City," but some of remember him from his days of hosting the kid's show "Steampipe Alley." The big finale of the week falls on Sunday, when Dane Cook, comedy's biggest superstar and boyfriend of Jessica Simpson, performs his mega-hit and critically acclaimed show, Vicious Circle, on the circular stage at Madison Square Garden. Promoters of the festival have deemed it as "destined to be THE comedy event of the year." The man can pack the Garden for a reason.

Check out NYComedyFestival.com for more acts, seminars, talks, hours, and ticket information. As I was reminded last night, a good laugh can cure what ails you, and if the New York Comedy Festival doesn't get you giggling you might just be terminal.

Take a Hike with Ken Kindler

A Walk to Ogden Brook Bridge

On Tuesday night, I realized that I would be able to participate in the East Hampton Trails Preservation Society (EHTPS) Wednesday hike. "Meet at Theodore Roosevelt County Park, off Montauk Highway, about 3 miles east of downtown Montauk. Watch for the park sign on left," the directions to the hike said. I visited the EHTPS website, www.ehtps.org, and read the description of the hike led by Gene Makl; "November 1, Wednesday, 10 a.m. OYSTER POND, ETC. (3-4 miles) Woods, open fields, and great views along the way to Oyster Pond and Ogden Brook Bridge and back make for a jam-packed 3-4 miles of great (but not difficult) hiking." The hike description included Gene's phone number if I needed more information. Two miles east of Shadmoor State Park, a half-mile beyond East Lake Drive, on the north side of Montauk Highway, look for the Theodore Roosevelt County Park sign. Follow the driveway up to the parking area alongside Third House Museum. This structure is presently closed to the public for renovations. Originally, Third House was the headquarters for Deep Hollow Ranch, founded as a cattle ranch in 1658, and operating continuously ever since. On the way up the driveway, note the restrooms to the left. After parking, continue up the driveway to a fence and gate. Look for the white rectangular blazes on the fence posts leading from behind Third House to the gate at the end of the driveway. Follow the blazes through the gate. Close the gate behind you (if you found it that way).

The trail follows the fence along a pasture where you will see some impressive looking longhorn cattle. The trail leads up a rise to a grassy knoll that gives a magnificent view of Lake Montauk. Be alert for where the trail turns to the right while making a slow descent into wetlands. Soon, the trail takes you through a wooden gate and veers away from the fence to bring you up along a ridge trail, offering stunningly beautiful views of pasture, beach and water. The trail tread runs across the slope; it is treacherous to walk on when there is ice or snow on the ground. The trail rises and falls, then climbs up onto Cornergate Ridge. At only 100 feet above sea level, you can see Oyster Pond, Block Island Sound, dunes, bluffs, Squaw Hill (an area of native American historic significance), and the lovely knobs, kettles, and meadows of Indian Fields. Looking at this grand natural treasure now, it is hard to imagine that all this was slated for the development of 1,4000 home sites back in the 1970s. If you are interested in how the area was protected and preserved, I would strongly suggest that you read Holding Back the Tide by Joan Porco, or visit www.ccom-montauk.org, to learn more about the Concerned Citizens of Montauk.

After the trail takes an abrupt turn South, it gradually descends to Hetty's Hole at the southwest arm of Oyster Pond. A wall of phragmites blocks the view of the pond. If you wish to hear about how Hetty met her untimely demise you can join the next EHTPS walk here. Several years ago, if you were to walk the next section of trail, you would have been first walking in mud, and then on a wide sandy road. Tom Dess, of Montauk State Park, and EHTPS worked together to transform this section of trail into a very pleasant walking experience. Part of it was moved out of the wetlands, a section of trail in the woods took the place of the unpaved road (Oyster Pond Road), and then, six months ago, State Parks personnel carried in and expertly laid plank walks over the muddy sections of trail. Where the trail now cuts across the unpaved road, you will find the signpost for the Paumanok Path and Ogden Brook Trail. From here, follow the white painted rectangles of the PP and the State Park's blue plastic trail markers to the Ogden Brook Bridge.

It is hard for me to stand on the bridge and not consider some of its history. The National Guard brought the precut lumber for the bridge out by helicopter, and EHTPS assembled it. The first winter after the bridge was constructed, the brook froze, lifted the bridge off of its footings and shifted it 10 feet up river. When EHTPS restored the bridge to its origional moorings, they secured one end to two pipes within pipes: The bridge is attached to the outer pipes, the inner pipes are embedded in the ground. The other end is anchored to chains. When the water rises, the bridge slides up the pipes.

I often stop to gaze at the brook and eat lunch while sitting on the bridge. Perhaps someday I'll see you there.

JUST FOR KIDS

EAST END KID:

GHOSTIES AND GOODIES AT DOUBLES

By Emily Hart Post
With a little help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

One of my favorite events of the Fall is the Halloween Party at Doubles. The biggest reason is that Magic Al (I know his name but like calling him Magic Owl or The Owl) is there and usually chooses me as his assistant. He knows that I am a good listener and I laugh at his jokes. This year was no different except that I was in costume as a Power Ranger. I had so much fun – I cannot wait until next Halloween.

Having a party or even you want us cover? E-mail david@starinme.com and maybe we'll be there.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

This is going to be a fast fall season for sure. The store windows are reflecting the upcoming season and everyone is already shopping for the holidays. Let's do some holiday shopping.

In Hampton Bays on West Montauk Highway, stop in at Accents Backyard Essentials by J. Tortorella for a look at how to deck your halls, tables and your home at their happy Christmas Shoppe. The new holiday collection is enchanting, and has festive décor in every style, from the cute to elegant, and unique gifts for everyone on your list. You will also find fine collectibles, including Dept. 56 Villages, "Krinkles" and Jim Shore figurines. Stop in and get into the Holiday spirit!

At The Village Home Goods, (formerly Southampton Sewing Center) on Jobs Lane in Southampton and on East Main Street in Riverhead, look for the $50 Miele vacuum cleaners and Buy Two, Get One Free boxes of vacuum bags.

Hildreth's on Main Street in Southampton is introducing new merchandise just in time for the Thanksgiving holiday dinner table. The new Autumn Waves collection from Casafina has arrived, with a distinctive and graceful new Casa Stone shapes and a rustic look appropriate for highly durable, fine stoneware. It is available in four coordinated earth tones: honey, pumpkin, celery and oatmeal, accented with a fine, reactive glaze edge-line. This line of dinnerware can be stored in the freezer or cooked in an oven, and is microwave and dishwasher safe. Everyone will enjoy doing these dishes after a big holiday meal.

YOUR WEEKLY GUIDE TO FUN IN THE HAMPTONS

Chasing America: Notes of a Rock n' Soul Integrationist

In the world of crystal-clear HD TVs, filled with hundreds of channels featuring people from all over the globe, grainy images of the freedom marches and civil rights protests from the 1970s appear to be set in the very distant past. It is hard to remember that it was less than forty years ago when Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. was brutally murdered on his motel balcony for trying to ensure that people of color were allowed into our nation's public schools. And even harder still to imagine that the Civil Rights Acts he fought to have passed needed to be legally re-affirmed in 1988, then again in 1991.

Perhaps the most effective way to remember how recently our country decided that Americans of all skin colors could live, work and study together, is by meeting and talking to one of the many pioneers of the movement that helped to bring these decisions to fruition. And not just any 1970s picketer, but a civil-rights pioneer who successfully integrated into White American society, and can eloquently describe the process by which a young, underprivileged man grew to become an award-winning writer, while participating in the greatest civil rights battle in our country's history. On Saturday, November 11th, at Canio's Books in Sag Harbor, true civil rights pioneer, Emmy Award and Golden Eagle Award-winning writer and actor Dennis Watlington will read from his recently published memoir, Chasing America: Notes of a Rock n' Soul Integrationist. Watlington, a Sag Harbor resident, will be on hand to answer questions about his life, his book, and his many experiences writing for film, television, and numerous publications, most notably Vanity Fair and The New York Times, and fighting for his rightful place as not only a great black writer, but first and foremost, a great American writer.

Watlington became an integrationist-in-training at the tender age of eleven, when he was selected to take part in a neighborhood boy's club that helped its members prepare for and apply to the country's most prestigious private schools. His mentor and program leader, Chick Griffin, believed "you want the kids they call incorrigible [for the program], because if you can peel back that layer, you will find an incredibly competitive, resourceful person." And, indeed, Dennis Watlington was one of the most incorrigible with a string of robberies and drug addictions under his belt by the time he reached high-school age. These obstacles plagued the intelligent young man throughout his youth, and eventually led to his expulsion from the program. However, a chance meeting with a trustee from the Hotchkiss School, and the full scholarship to the challenging private boarding school that resulted from that meeting, put him back on the road to success. When legendary writer Gail Sheehy met Dennis as a teenager, she was so taken by him that she wrote a chapter about him, the "spirit inextinguishable," in her 1976 critically-acclaimed book Passages. Watlington's friendship with activists such as Sheehy and writer Gail Kopple, coupled with his liberal Hotchkiss and New York University education, molded him into an eloquent, passionate activist for black rights with a penchant for translating his feelings into gripping stories with universal appeal.

In 1979, Watlington wrote and directed his first play, produced by the American Theater of Actors. The play, titled Bullpen, was the play that "Bruce Willis came out of, Denzel had a shot in, Giancarlo Esposito came out of it, that is the play where it started," he explained. This play was one of the first instances where black themes appealed to mixed audiences, and helped to open the floodgates for black writers, directors, and producers who dreamed of entering the exclusive worlds of backstage Broadway and back-lot Hollywood. After his success as a playwright, Watlington began reporting for Vanity Fair, and also penned scripts for the daytime soap operas "All My Children" and "One Life to Live." Watlington explained that when he first started writing for television many people thought that it was "loony to hire a black writer to write a White script... I was termed a 'Blackologist,' which means that when they had a black theme they would dial me up."

Now, with his success as an award-winning documentary film writer, with masterpieces such as Zahira, the story of a Spanish girl affected by the 2004 bombings in Spain, and The Untold West: The Black West, under his belt, Watlington is not only a pioneer for black rights, but "one of the beneficiaries" of those rights and privileges for which he fought. Now, fifteen years after the latest Civil Rights Act was signed, our country is once again in turmoil, and our ability to retain many of our rights is in question. During these confusing and daunting times, the words of a true soldier in the United States' last battle for freedom may be exactly what we need to stay strong and uncompromising, and to keep in mind that once victory is had, the spoils are indeed worth the fight.

Dennis Watlington will read selections from Chasing America: Notes of a Rock n' Soul Integrationist, on Saturday, November 11th, at 6 p.m. The reading will take place at Canio's Books, 290 Main St., in Sag Harbor. The reading is free; reservations are not required. For more information, please call (631) 725-4926, or visit www.caniosbooks.com.

review: grey gardens...by gordin & christiano

Christine Ebersole received a Drama Desk Award, an Obie, an Outer Critics Circle Award, a special citation from NY Drama Critics, and the Drama League Award last season for her towering performance in the limited run, off-Broadway production of Grey Gardens, set in a 28-room mansion of the same name in East Hampton. If you weren't lucky enough to see this sublime actress in her awe-inspiring portrayal, count your lucky stars, because the musical inspired by the Maysles brothers' 1975 cult documentary of the same name has opened on Broadway. The story is based on East Hampton's notorious recluses, Edith Bouvier Beale and her daughter Little Edie, the "It Girl" of her generation. Often referred to as Big Edie and Little Edie, they were known to the world as the aunt and cousin, respectively, of Jackie Kennedy Onassis. They lived in a flea-infested residence on West End Road off Georgica Beach with 52 cats and assorted raccoons.

Turning a film about an eccentric mother and daughter living amongst decrepit squalor into a Broadway musical seems like an impossible task, but the creative team behind Grey Gardens has done a first rate job. The inventive staging, flawlessly directed by Michael Greif, has been improved upon since its premiere with subtle changes that clarify the women's unique love-hate relationship.

Christine Ebersole

The absorbing book by Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Doug Wright (I Am My Own Wife) is a thought-provoking, even-fascinating study of the women's indomitable spirits that begins with a prologue set in 1973. Mr. Wright then expands upon the documentary with a First Act that goes back 32 years to a fictionalized summer day in 1941, when Grey Gardens house was in its glorious heyday. Little Edie, (now played charmingly by Erin Davie in the musical's only cast change), was a young debutante then, a star in the social register known to members of the Maidstone Club as "The Body Beautiful."

When the act begins, we discover Edith Bouvier Beale, played superbly by Christine Ebersole, in the elegant living room, where she is rehearsing with her musical accompanist played by Bob Stillman, the songs she will sing that day at Little Edie's engagement party to Joseph Patrick Kennedy. Matt Cavenaugh is convincing as the young Kennedy, who is madly in love with Little Edie, and his performance has grown in stature. The act ends with the younger Edie fleeing to Manhattan when her engagement is abruptly broken off.

Although somewhat long, Act I sets up the dynamics of the mother-daughter relationship and gives resonance to Act II, which recreates the 1973 filming of the legendary documentary. The audience becomes the camera as we are invited in for a guided tour of the squalid conditions. We are shocked by the women's outrageous behavior which provides a touching look at their broken dreams and the bond that binds them.

In a smart casting switch, Christine Ebersole now plays the 56 year-old Little Edie, and is absolutely sensational in a performance that feels channeled right from the soul of Edie herself. Mary Louise Wilson is equally brilliant as her elderly mother, Big Edie, and the two women are a match made in heaven. They are compelling, hysterically funny, yet gut wrenchingly sad, capturing the bizarre spirit of this unique relationship.

The music is by Scott Frankel, with lyrics by Michael Korie. In the First Act, they have created a loving pastiche to 1940s show tunes by echoing the standard and style of the great American composers. The songs move the story along with clever exposition, but none of the tunes are exactly memorable. The lyrics, however, are cute and winning, especially "Peas in a Pod." The Second Act songs are edgier and darker, but it is hard to say how good they would be without these fabulous women. Here the outrageous lyrics expose the women's conflicts and zaniness in oddly moving ways. "Another Winter in a Summer Town" is haunting, and Ms. Ebersole inhabits the song with heart-stopping nuances that breathe life into every moment.

Allen Moyer's fashionable set turns into a dilapidated ruin in Act II, mirroring the haunting turn of events. The costumes by William Ivey Long are perfect. Bravo to everyone, but Christine Ebersole anchors the evening first as Big Edie, and then as Little Edie. Her breathtaking performance, now eligible for the Tony, demonstrates the art of living in the life of the play and may be a once in a lifetime achievement.

Grey Gardens opened on Broadway at the Walter Kerr Theatre, 219 West 48th Street on November 2. For tickets call (212)-239-6200 or visit the box office.

Marie Antoinette

If a glittery-gorgeous bijou is seriously flawed, don't your eyes and senses continue to resonate and thrall? Sofia Coppola's Marie Antoinette will tickle your fancy even as you lament its damages. Unfortunately, like the title of her wonderful previous film, the French Queen's, biopic appears to have gotten "Lost in Translation." However, don't be alarmed. Unlike the young Queen, pushed into a barren marriage at 14, Ms. Coppola did not lose her head completely in styling the 18th century Queen as a vibrant, anxious, over-indulged pubescent, gradually gathering substance before history cut her down.

Director and screenwriter Coppola may have felt the sharp, cutting edge of the French when the film was booed at its premier at the Cannes Film Festival. She probably took it in stride as, after all, she was on their turf and she had given their favorite Queen a flouncy and surfacey treatment, albeit intelligent, witty flounce and oh my, what surfaces: The actual location of Versailles and pastel acres of silk and lace, not to mention as much of Kirsten Dunst's naked body as a sultry Antoinette seen as frequently as possible, before Gendarmes would shut down the place. Maybe Cannes audiences objected to the use of American slang or rock music, and wasn't that a pair of pink Chuck Taylor's in that shot? You can applaud the director-writer now, if you like, if only for her cracking the stale, brittle peanut shell of Hollywood biography movies. Inspired in the beginning by Antonia Fraser's 2001 book that was acclaimed for its thoroughness, Ms. Coppola's point of view is of Marie's. What impressed Sofia was the story of a teenage queen and that's what she tells – a girl's story. It is almost a "girlie movie" – the teen girl of 200 years ago meets the saucy voluptuous materialistic teens of today and loving it all. It's a cheeky form of "Girl Power."

Austrian born and whisked away, then stripped of any of the traces of her background, she is further demeaned by the young future King Louis XVI, who could not, or would not, consummate the marriage until seven years later when the much needed heir was born. Without real friends, and mentally and physically corseted to a fair-thee-well by court etiquette and bad public relations, Marie took to overdoses of luxury of which there was a whole lot. What does a wealthy, healthy girl want? How about creamy, tall, airy cake? Shoes are good, plenty of them and you can't have too many jewels. How can you enjoy all the great parties without those things? Gee, that party monster – drinking 'til dawn, fattening pastries stuck in your ears, and all those unmentionable Frenchie things. In turbulent frustration, Marie escalated high style to new heights, like hairdos. Take the mile-high pouf, immortalized today by Marge Simpson's blue tower of frizzy passion.

Under the ornate wigs is equally baroque casting: Marie's Austrian Empress mother is (hold on!) the British Rock Goddess, Marianne Faithful. Maria's limp wristed husband is Jason Schwartzman. Rip Torn plays the old King Louis XV with all the vim and white wine vinegar the French King allows him. Still steeped in Eurotrash dressing is Asia Argento as his crude mistress, Madame Du Barry. Judy Davis as the Comtesse de Noailles is Marie's persnickety maintainer of protocol. She chides, instructs, scolds and rather vainly attempts to keep the aristocratic rituals intact or at best keep the misconduct well hidden under the large hooped skirts and layers of petticoats where there's barely enough room under covers for the Court's many peccadillos. Par exemple, Antoinette takes a handsome Swedish nobleman as a lover. The Petit Trianon becomes their playground. They romp, she play acts, they read, they mess around and become the object of awful gossip and pounding-on-the-door anger. By the time someone answers the door it is too late.

The filmmaker has kept the restless revolutionary times behind pink gauze, so as not to sully the fantasia-like languor the Queen floated in. She does the same with her being cut down in her prime. There's no need to see the final execution. The demise of her sinfully delicious existence is touching enough, even though we've viewed her few years merely as a slice of life. Mais sacre bleu! What a heady, light and delicious slice of cake it is. History says she never suggested the peasants partake in any.

This peasant says, "Dive in!"

Dave Evans'

MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

The Return

Sarah Michelle Gellar is unusually engaging here as saleswoman Joanna Mills, haunted by vivid nightmares of the murder of an unknown young woman. Heading to the dead girl's hometown, Joanna's life begins to unravel and she finds herself becoming the next target. Sharp, claustrophobic and creepy, it's a shame that this comes just too late for Halloween – it deserves an audience.

A Good Year

For someone who takes himself so seriously, Russell Crowe seems to have made an odd choice with this, his only film release of the year. A twee and grating story of an Englishman played by Crowe, who inherits a vineyard in France. Over the course of the film he finds love, acceptance and the true and natural pleasure of rural life. I found myself feeling nauseous.

Stranger Than Fiction

A peculiar meta-fiction from the director of Monster's Ball, this sees Will Ferrell playing an IRS auditor who suddenly discovers he is a character in a novel. His attempts to change his fate are odd and endearing and it's a pleasure to see Ferrell leave behind the gurning and hijinks to play a sweetly affecting Willy Loman-type. Fabulous support is provided by Dustin Hoffman, Maggie Gyllenhaal, and the ever-lovely Emma Thompson.

Borat: Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazahkstan

Sacha Baron Cohen (of "Ali G" fame) returns with arguably his most broadly offensive satirical tool: Borat, a Kazahkstani talking head on report in the US. This is vicious and impressive comedy, allowing room for belly laughs as well as the more uncomfortable humor which comes from Cohen's skewering of the most absurd aspect of America.

Flushed Away

Just when you thought it was safe to go back in the cinema, after a summer awash with talking bears and dancing cows, bam! The return of CGI, just in time for Christmas. This actually isn't that bad fare, coming from the Aardman studios (those responsible for Wallace and Gromit etc.) and telling the story of a posh house mouse (voiced by Hugh Jackman) who finds himself flushed into the sewers.

The Santa Clause 3: The Escape Clause

It's that special time of year when cheap has-been comedians don their red and white pointed hats and take on the mantle of Santa in the futile hope of becoming the hero of children far and wide. Tim Allen is more persistent than most as shown in this, his third starring role in this flaccid series facing off against Martin Short's equally lame Jack Frost. Seasonal? Yes. Anything other than crass, heartless and exploitative? No.

Saw III

The best new horror franchise on the block rolls out its third installment and there's plenty on offer to turn stomachs and tingle spines. Once again the dementedly sadistic Jigsaw (Tobin Bell) is torturing the good people of America with their own morality. Properly frightening stuff.

Catch A Fire

More worthy drama from Australian director Philip Noyce. This tale of political rebellion in Apartheid-run South Africa carries its weight clumsily. Tim Robbins and Derek Luke play the chief activists and play them well, but there is something too leaden about Noyce's take on the situation to ever really inspire.

Running With Scissors

Based on Augusten Burroughs' best-selling comic memoir, this is quirky and interesting family fare with excellent performances all round. There's something wrong with the pacing of the narrative and this leads to an odd rhythm. That said, Annette Bening is phenomenal as Augusten's mother while Joseph Cross plays the boy himself with guts and glory.

Flags of Our Fathers

An ensemble period film based on the Allied (and largely American) victory at Iwo Jima in February, 1945. Clint Eastwood takes the helm with Steven Spielberg and Mystic River's Rob Lorenz lurking in the wings as producers. This has "Nominate-Me!" scrawled all over it, but the whole affair feels overly worthy and heavy-handed in the most lifeless of ways.

The Prestige

Christopher Nolan (of Memento fame) returns to form with this stunning, dark and brooding tale of competition and obsession in 19th century London. Hugh Jackman and Christian Bale are phenomenal as the dueling magicians at the center of the plot, and even celluloid-poison David Bowie can't sink this. A gorgeous triumph.

The Departed

Martin Scorsese's on familiar territory here with this epic tale of the battle between the police and the Irish mafia in Boston. It's all very Boys Own Adventure with a strong line in honor and justice, mouthed out by a cast boasting Leonardo DiCaprio, Jack Nicholson, Martin Sheen and Matt Damon to name but a few. Not for everyone but very polished for what it is.

GARBO TALKS

Sidney Lumet directs other celeb Hamptonites in a charming, poignant story. A dutiful son desperately tries to fulfill his mother's last wish to meet Greta Garbo. Anne Bancroft as the tough mom is so great! Their meeting in the closing scene features the fab Betty Comden as Garbo. Darn, I gave away the ending.

NETWORK

East Hampton's Sidney Lumet and writer Paddy Chayefsky's dead-on broadside aimed at television and unprincipled industries presaged today's headlines. A way-over-the-top entertainment, it won Oscars for Mr. Chayefesky, Peter Finch, Faye Dunaway and Beatrice Straight. You'll be shouting, "We aren't going to take it anymore!"

SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE

Diane Keaton proves an " older" woman still has "it" while Jack Nicholson suffers a heart attack wooing her daughter. Jack's young doctor, Keanu Reeves, goes ga-ga over Diane. It's a very youthful take on the A.A.R.P. crowd, in the fountain of youth's Hamptons.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

. With Thanksgiving just a couple of weeks away it's time to get organized. There is the turkey that you have no doubt already ordered, but that is only the beginning. Years ago, I gave classes called "Thanksgiving Trimmings." A successful class that was repeated many times as all the dishes surrounding the centerpiece turkey could be made ahead. Do-ahead is always music to the ear of any cook.

While I do not advocate freezing as a rule, fully-cooked soups and pastry dough for pies and tarts can be successfully frozen and defrosted overnight in the refrigerator. Cranberries, the ubiquitous sauce at the Thanksgiving table, are rich in pectin, which is why, when cooking them, they quickly thicken to a purée. Select your favorite recipe and prepare up to a week or more ahead then place directly in a serving bowl, cover and refrigerate. There are also vegetable dishes such as carrot and butternut squash gratin, a homey dish flavored with cumin and a kick of Tabasco; and puréed sweet potatoes and apples with candied walnuts that can be prepared ahead in its entirety and baked before serving. For a timely vegetable, par-cook Brussels sprouts and toast a batch of hazelnuts one or two days before to finish in a quick flavorful sauté.

With the help of autumn's locally grown fresh bounty you can easily turn out delectable dishes with foolproof results.

CARROT AND BUTTERNUT SQUASH GRATIN
Serves 6-8

1 1/2 pounds butternut squash, peeled, seeded and diced
3 cups peeled and sliced carrots
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 cup chicken stock
1/2 teaspoon cumin
Dash Tabasco
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper
Finely chopped parsley for garnish

1. Prepare the vegetables for cooking and place in a saucepan with water to cover. Bring to the edge of a boil then simmer over medium heat for 15-20 minutes until tender. Drain the vegetables and transfer to bowl of food processor (fitted with steel knife) or a blender. Add butter and process or blend until combined but not puréed. Scrape down sides as necessary. Add broth and seasonings and process or blend to mix to a chunky purée. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

2. Transfer contents to a lightly buttered gratin dish. Can be done ahead to this point. Refrigerate, covered for up to two days, if prepared ahead.

3. When ready to serve, preheat oven to 350 degrees and bake gratin for 15-20 minutes. Sprinkle with parsley and serve.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS WITH HAZELNUTS AND THYME
Serves 6-8

1/2 cup hazelnuts
2 pounds fresh Brussels sprouts, rinsed and trimmed
2 teaspoons coarse (kosher) salt
1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
6 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 tablespoon fresh thyme leaves
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

Preheat oven to 325 degrees.

1. Place hazelnuts on a cookie sheet and toast in preheated oven until brown, about 10-12 minutes. Wrap warm hazelnuts in a clean kitchen towel and rub to loosen the skins as well as possible. Remove from towel and chop coarsely.

2. Cut a shallow crisscross in the core of each sprout. Bring a large pot of water to the boil. Put in salt and oil and add Brussels sprouts. Boil uncovered until bright green, stirring occasionally, about 10 minutes. Drain and cool quickly under a spray of cold water to stop the cooking then pat dry in a clean kitchen towel. Can be prepared up to one day ahead to this point.

3. When ready to serve, melt butter in a large, heavy skillet over high heat until golden brown. Add Brussels sprouts and thyme and stir until heated through. Season with salt and pepper. Transfer to a warm serving dish and garnish with toasted hazelnuts.

SWEET POTATOES WITH APPLES AND WALNUTS
Serves 8-10

6-7 sweet potatoes or yams, about 3 pounds
Coarse (kosher) salt for the cooking water
3 golden delicious apples, peeled, cored and cubed
1/2 cup water
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 cup half and half
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
1/8 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
1/2 teaspoon (or to taste) coarse (kosher) salt
1/3 cup walnut pieces, lightly toasted*
8-10 candied walnut halves for decoration* (optional)

1. Put potatoes in a large saucepan with water to cover and bring to a boil. Add about 1 tablespoon salt and cook with cover ajar at a gentle boil for 35-40 minutes until tender. Drain in a colander. When cool enough to handle but still warm, peel and cut into 1-inch chunks.

2. Meanwhile, combine apples, water and 2 tablespoons butter in a separate saucepan and simmer for 15 minutes, stirring occasionally until mixture resembles a coarse purée.

3. Purée the potatoes into a large bowl by passing them through a food mill fitted with the medium disc. Then purée the apples adding them to the potatoes. Add remaining tablespoon butter, half and half, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg, and toasted walnut pieces and stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning as necessary. Transfer mixture to a shallow baking-serving dish. Can be prepared one or two days ahead to this point.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

"GREAT SCANDINAVIAN TEXTILES" AT BRAVURA

Circa the late 1960s. A sign of the times for yours truly was not the expected anti-Vietnam War demonstrations, campus riots or marches on Washington. Although these events were certainly important, this critic's preoccupations evolved around motherhood and film studies. As a reminder of the social and political upheaval whirling outside the doors of suburbia, we bought a big, bright tablecloth for the dining room table.

It was the newest Marimekko design, representing liberation from the ordinary and unimaginative cloths on the market. It was our metaphor for freedom and daring. And an appreciation for other country's (in this case, Finland's) unconventional aesthetics. The oddly shaped brown and black flowers presented a bold statement, conveying to one and all our liberal attitudes. Six months later, another Marimekko cloth, this one with red and pink blossoms, replaced the first one. We were indeed flower children to the core.

Through the years, an appreciation for Scandinavian textiles has expanded to include pure design elements and particularly the application of such aspects to everyday objects. A trip to Sweden and Norway in the 1990s still leaves yours truly wishing our mundane objects, like dishes and even bobby pins, had such stylish flourishes.

Which finally brings us to the point: this critic's association with Scandinavian textiles is mostly personal and anecdotal, but also, oddly enough, political as well. And so is the textile exhibition at Southampton's Bravura Gallery. Besides yours truly's cherished pink and red flowered cloth, there are others by Marimekko (Finland) and Ljungbergs Textiltryck (Sweden).

Textiles by Marimekko

That textiles are art (as Jack Larson's own collection and exhibition in New York a few years ago continues to prove) is a given. The salient point is that Bravura's show demonstrates another aspect of the works on view: their social and political statements. Putting aside the 1960s "hippy flowers" of this critic's experience, the blossoms now take on other meanings in the current decade, recalling Ross Bleckner's poppy-like shapes at Guild Hall's Seventy-Fifth Anniversary show. His bold blossoms were flattened and deformed, a metaphor for AIDS.

Marimekko's flowers are hopeful; Ross' shapes are despairing.

Other textiles are more mechanical or scientific in nature, however, like "Network," which displays an airport's infrastructure. "Bullet" is the name for a textile design which replicates Steve McQueen's car chase through the San Francisco streets in the film, Bullet. Both works employ an unusual map-like format

"Atomics" uses a grid format to suggest, we assume, the theory of atoms (post World War II).

The curators have done a fine job presenting the myriad of meanings possible in these textiles. It's proof positive that such Scandinavian examples are among the best in the world.

The show will be on view at the Bravura Gallery in Southampton until Nov. 17. Call 631-259-2605.

Honoring the Artist: Daniel Pollera

While this week's cover by Daniel Pollera, "August Sun," implies that the month has come and gone, the remnants are still with us, even though it's now November. Mr. Pollera's penchant for evoking meaningful moods is more to the point, however, and he certainly does so in this image, no matter what the season. His signature chair, often placed on a porch or beach is also relevant, no matter what the season.

And no matter what the season, Mr. Pollera is always willing and able to share his thoughts, experiences and feelings with us, peppered with his characteristic vividness and vibrancy. Always.

Q: What kind of mood do you want to communicate with the cover image?

A: Peace, quiet, the effect of light, abstract shadows playing on the porch. I'm trying to bring an emotion to the viewer.

Q: Where did this emotional mission of yours come from? Did you learn it in school? From mentors?

A: I don't have a formal education in art. It's been trial and error. I figured it out.

Q: I think you're an emotional person yourself. You want people to share the experience of what an image means to you. It's also a signature of yours, if I may say so. You mentioned that you're changing some of your future endeavors, which is not to suggest that your work will lose its essential aspects..

A: Some things have changed. I'm not publishing as much as I used to, maybe publishing one or two works a year during the last twelve months. I'm also really excited about my decision to try painting in oils; I haven't done that in ten years when I created a mural for both the Roslyn Savings Bank and one for an old Tutor-style house. I think oils will be better for blending large areas of color.

Q: How about the size of your works? Are you anticipating a change?

A: Yes. I'm doing an acrylic piece now, and I wondered how it would look in a large format. It's the side porch of a house in Maine. The shadows, columns and railings make the porch look like it's floating.

Q: We're curious, are your children interested in art?

A: My son is more mechanical-minded. He'll go into civil engineering. My daughter is in college, majoring in hotel management. She has my outgoing personality; my son is creative.

Q: You have explained how your creative endeavors may be changing somewhat. How has your philosophy changed, if at all?

A: I have more control now. Now I can discipline myself. I used to be obsessive if a painting wasn't going well. Now, when it's time to quit working on it, I can leave. I don't think about it. I have a life.

Q: What do you attribute that to?

A: I don't know. My mind just fixed the obsession. Actually, my mind and body adjusted things.

Q: Are there things you do that may contribute to this attitude as well?

A: I love getting out in my boat, with my toy poodle. To feel the sun on my face, watch the sparkle of the sun on the water. To submerge myself in the environment. You owe it to yourself. It's good for the soul.

Q: Yes, I see your point. That's the mood you're trying to convey in your paintings.

A: Right.

The Power of Music

There was a time when a private movie soundtrack to accompany your life sounded like an idea from a science fiction movie. It's one thing that makes movies so powerful – just as the train pulls away from the station in the rain, cue Counting Crows. The emotion hits you on all senses, making the scene all the more powerful. In this day and age though, we are able to create these perfect scenes in our own lives. The advent of the Walkman brought music straight to our eardrums, and the revolutionary iPod emerged within two decades.

The iPod is small and light enough to strap to your bicep or to slip in the front pocket of tight jeans. The headphones subtly slip directly into our ears, and our personal soundtrack is left to run. Cat Stevens croons as the orange sun sets over Louse Point; Radiohead mourns the falling of another rumpled brown leaf onto Main Street in East Hampton. My friend recently endured a unique trauma – she lives alone in a big house, and I think I remember her contemplating getting a roommate at one point. But she did not invite the stranger who decided to set up his home in hers – a bat! When she discovered the potential risks of living in close proximity to bats, she had to undergo a series of standard rabies shots. So there she was at Stony Brook Hospital, awaiting a couple of shots in the butt, and arm and feeling pretty sorry for herself. Just as the Film Festival closes and the mass exodus from the Hamptons really begins, she finds herself with a most unwelcome roommate and a few embarrassing (and painful!) visits to the hospital.

But she endured. What got her through the excruciatingly slow day in the waiting room? The Grateful Dead. To be exact, it was the "China Cat Sunflower" into "I Know You Rider" that filled her head, drowning out the unappealing sounds around her – tears, shouts, complaints, moans, and depressing conversations. But there was my friend, her mind at a summer music festival in the hills, Jerry Garcia strumming his guitar. I wasn't surprised to hear how powerfully her iPod saved her. Music has such a profound effect on us. It can uplift, soothe, and accompany. It gives a rhythm to your joys, and it also gives voice to your hardships.

When I was living in Bangkok, alone in a studio apartment, I sometimes felt like the loneliest person on Earth. It was a bustling city, but I didn't know a soul. And a bunch of strangers can make you feel even more alone than a wide-open, empty expanse of beach. This journey was before the iPod, so I lugged a CD player and about 50 CDs all over Southeast Asia. It sounds crazy, considering I was carrying it all on my back and probably could have brought a few more changes of underwear if I had filed down my music selection a little bit, but I needed every CD. You never knew when you were going to be feeling Willie Nelson, or when no one but the Beastie Boys would do.

The song that ended up propelling me through the loneliest of times was, not shockingly, by Tupac. His lyrics are written for the loner, and the song that became my anthem was "Me Against the World." There I was, standing on my balcony, looking out at the hazy skyline of Bangkok, airplanes darting across the sky, and Tupac was hollerin' at me. "I know it seems hard sometimes, but for every dark night, there's a bright day after that. So keep your head up, stick your chest out, and handle it." So I'd take a deep breath, wander down the stairs, and go cruisin' through the crowded streets of Bangkok on the back of a motorbike, linen pants flying behind me in the wind. Thanks Tupac.

Whether you're looking to drown in your own tears with Aretha Franklin or you want to slip through the back pages of Bob Dylan, the power of music in your life is something that this generation takes for granted.

What's the soundtrack to your life?

Health, Beauty & Fitness

The Y Factor with Christian McLean

With the recent news that Kirstie Alley (most recently seen in "Fat Actress") was consuming over 8,000 calories a day as her former heavyweight self, I decided to take a look at how exactly someone would go about reaching that level of caloric consumption. This is not a guide for how to become as overweight as Ms. Alley, but just a way of finding out what can put you way past your daily calorie intake.

The first thing I did was open my freezer. Sitting on the bottom shelf was a pint of Ben & Jerry's Peanut Butter Cup ice cream. Ignoring the 24 grams of fat, I went directly to the calories per serving – 340, not bad, but a pint contains 4 servings. That's 1360 calories in the pint. But I can top that, last Friday I went to the movies and had a large tub of popcorn with extra butter. God knows what the butter consists of, but on average a tub of popcorn with butter will run about 1500 calories, now add extra butter and I was edging toward 2000 calories. Sadly, I finished the tub before the movie started and actually got a second helping, and ate another 3/4 of that tub. If I would have to guess, I consumed almost 3200 calories in less than two hours.

Ever have one too many drinks and then down an entire Dominos pizza? Sure you have, it's called college. Well, a 12-inch pie will register about 1800 calories. Now add that to the drinks you had beforehand and you're looking at a 2500-calorie night on the town. Pizza doesn't sound as good as it just did, how about wings? Ruby Tuesday's frozen wings will run 109 calories per wing. In a box of ten, that's 1090 calories. Oh, I forgot, the blue cheese is 126 calories per ounce.

Okay, so I've just outlined some of the most unhealthy foods we consume on a regular basis. So, let's add it up. If I sat down and ate a pint of ice cream, 1 3/4 buckets of popcorn with extra butter, an entire Dominos pizza with a few beers, 10 Ruby Tuesday buffalo wings and an oz. of blue cheese, I would have consumed 8276 calories – par for the daily consumption for Ms. Alley.

I can eat. I can eat more than almost anyone I know, and still, I couldn't consume that much food. Not even on my best day. Besides sheer calories, these foods are loaded with fat, cholesterol and carbohydrates, and besides the tomato sauce on the pizza and some calcium from the cheese, there isn't much in the way of anything beneficial coming out of them.

To consume this many calories while eating healthy foods, you would have to eat 12 pounds of salmon in one day, or 320 cups of raw broccoli, or 96 cups of blueberries. Now, I'm not telling you to do any of those things, I just wanted you to see the sheer amount of calories in those unhealthy items compared to those in the healthy list.

The important thing is to eat properly and in proportion. Learning your daily calorie intake is fairly simple. It is a basic formula which takes into account your gender, age, weight, height, and physical activity. Visit any number of websites online to get a rough estimate of how many calories you need to maintain your weight. For a more exact number visit a nutritionist. They can also help calculate the best way to lose weight, if that is what you desire. Just be ready, because I'm pretty sure they will tell you to stay away from Buffalo wings and extra butter.

Next time you hover over a pint of ice cream, think about Ms. Alley. Sure she's slimmed down and scored a TV show and a Jenny Craig spokesperson deal, but do you really think your pint of Ben & Jerry's is going to get you a Showtime sitcom or is it just the first step on a slippery slope?

What are you waiting for?

Write Dan and tell him how you feel!

Feed The Beasts

Everyone knows that it is necessary to be more vigilant of your pets in the winter time, but did you know that wild animals also benefit from a little bit of care this time of year? If you love watching the birds fly outside your windows and the deer bounding through your yard, why not make them some delicious treats that will keep them coming to your house no matter how blustery it gets?

Since filling up bird feeders with seed is an everyday chore, suet and peanut butter mixtures are easier bird feeding options; they last longer and they even have more nutrition in them for your feathered friends than bird seed.

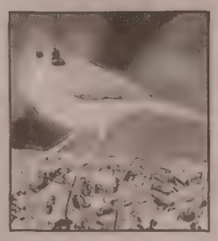
To make peanut butter trail mix suet, first melt three cups of store-bought suet or shortening (like Crisco) in a pan. Then, mix in two cups of peanut butter and add raisins, dried berries, nuts, seeds, and cornmeal.

After the suet is cool, it's time to get creative. If you have some empty plastic nets, like the nets that oranges are packed in, you can freeze the suet into balls, and then hang one of the plastic nets from a tree and put a frozen ball or two of suet-mix in it. Save the other suet balls in the freezer for refills. The nets will not only make hanging the suet a snap, they also give the birds something to hold on to while they enjoy their meal.

Another way to feed suet is to smear it all over a pinecone when the suet it is still warm. Then, freeze the pinecone and hang it from a string or ribbon outside. These pinecone feeders are festive looking, and are a nice resting place for smaller songbirds. If you have trees with knots and holes in them, you can also stuff warm suet into these natural birdfeeders. An added bonus of feeding suet from live trees is that the melted suet attracts insects to the holes in all seasons, providing even more delicious treats for your feathered neighbors.

If you want to decorate an outdoor tree for the holidays, you can freeze suet-mix into any shape by rolling the cooled mixture onto waxed paper and cutting it into shapes using cookie cutters. Poke a hole in each shape with a chopstick, pop them in the freezer, and attach the frozen ornaments to the tree using twist-ties, wire, string, or ribbons. The birds will love them, and your tree will be decorated all winter long with homemade ornaments, and brightly colored, live ornaments, too!

If making suet sounds like too much work, you can always buy bunches of dried corn from farm stands or grocery stores, and hang them up for the birds to eat. Just make sure that they are not treated with wax or any other substance that enhances their sheen. Squirrels and deer like these too, so try putting some on your fences or other squirrel and deer-friendly places.



Squirrels also love nuts and seeds, and a fun way to keep the squirrels out of your bird feeders and watch them play, is to hang a basket from a tree with a rope, and fill the basket with peanuts, or any other kind of nuts or seeds. Another great treat for both birds and squirrels is the eat-in feeder; just clean out the largest Mason jar you can find, and suspend it from a tree with wire. Half-fill the jar with seeds or nuts, and wait for the birds and squirrels to figure out that they can sit inside the windproof jar while they snack. Nuts and seeds in their shells are more natural for squirrels to eat, and will last longer in your basket, since they will have to work to get them out.

As you can see by the increasing numbers of skin-and-bones deer in the Hamptons, local deer have a hard time finding enough nutritious food to get them through the winter. You can help them get the minerals they need by putting out a saltlick or salt block for them. Just set the block on a stump, or if you buy one with a hole in it, hang it from your fence; deer will come by all winter long to lick and play with it. Don't put out hay or grain for deer, unless you intend to feed them every day; they will get used to being fed and will start to expect their meal daily, whether you want to go out into the snow to feed them or not.

You can buy saltlicks, suet, seeds, and anything else you need to make treats for your backyard buddies at most hardware or farm supply stores, like Agway. If you use Crisco or another type of shortening instead of suet dough to hold your bird treats together, you can find all of the ingredients you need to make bird food at the grocery store. Even if you spend more time inside your house than outside now that it is getting chilly, you can enjoy the beauty of nature all winter long by leaving out little treats to make sure that animals in your neighborhood know that if they want to eat the good stuff, they've got to come to you.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Time for Holiday Planning

Holiday plants are an important part of the festive season at Rock Cottage. And now is the apropos time to start forcing certain bulbs to brighten rooms during the holidays. In addition to the traditional paper whites that are frequently seen this time of year, Amaryllis is one of the bolder and more colorful choices for winter forcing. It is such an easy plant to grow – and one that produces spectacular blooms. Since it takes the bulbs six to eight weeks to bloom once started, planning bulbs now, and for every two weeks over the next several months, will result in continuous blooms from early December through May.

Every home ought to have at least one Amaryllis over the holidays. The flowers come in many beautiful shades of red, white, pink, salmon, orange, lemon-yellow, and multi-colored variations of pink, red, and white. Look for one called "Apple Blossom"- our favorite!

This is the easiest bulb to force into bloom. Amaryllis (Hippeastrum) produces large, (up to six inch blooms) showy flowers. It is extremely popular for this reason and is often given as a gift plant. The bulb itself is tender (suited for outdoors in Zones 9-11), but can be grown in pots in the north. The plant originates from the Andes mountains of South America. In our zone, potted plants are used during winter and can be moved outdoors after the danger of frost has passed. Amaryllis comes as individually packaged bulbs or may be pre-potted. The pre-planted Amaryllis gift boxes normally take no more initial effort than simply watering them to bring them into bloom. However, we find the additional cost for pre-potted bulbs not very economical and prefer to purchase bare bulbs.

If you purchase bare bulbs, pot them in a container that is about two inches larger in diameter than the base of the bulb – no more. Potted bulbs thrive under conditions in which they are root-bound. Containers may be either clay or plastic, but must have drainage holes in the bottom to permit good soil drainage.

Bulbs must be planted with about one-third to one-half of the bulb exposed above the soil surface. This keeps the bulb's nose dry, which helps reduce the possibility of fungal disease. The use of sterilized potting mediums containing some peat and perlite is probably the best choice for Amaryllis.

Water the bulb well once potted, but avoid getting any water on the nose of the bulb. Keep the potting medium moist and avoid over-watering the bulb. Keep the bulb in a sunny area with temperatures ranging from about 68-75 degrees F (bright sunlight is essential in preventing the flower stalk from growing too long and flopping over.) Once the plant shows signs of growth, add either a slow-release fertilizer or use a water-soluble fertilizer twice monthly to support the bulb's rapid growth.

When flower buds appear, move the bulb out of direct sunlight and to a cooler location. This will help prolong bloom time – which can last for a month. When the flowers fade, cut them off at the top of the stalk just above the bulb top. At this point, you need to make the choice of discarding the bulb, or trying to get it to re-bloom.

Discarding the bulb is, of course, easy. If you want to get the bulb to re-bloom, continue watering the bulb normally and fertilize monthly. The secret to successfully getting amaryllis to re-bloom is to keep the plants actively growing after they finish one round of flowers. Place the pot in a sunny window, and keep the plant moist and fertilized over the next months to encourage growth and bulb development. You can continue to grow your Amaryllis indoors all year, or outdoors as soon as the danger of frost has passed in the spring. In spring, you can plant the bulb in the garden and continue cultivating until the leaves begin to yellow in late summer. At this point, cut the leaves back to about two inches from the top of the bulb and remove it from the pot or garden soil. Keep the bulb in a cool (40-50 degrees F) dark place for about eight weeks to provide adequate dormancy. At this point, you can repot the bulbs as before. The bulbs are likely to re-bloom in eight weeks. (Please note that sometimes the bulbs simply send up leaves instead of blooms. If this occurs, repeat the growth cycle again, and the plant is likely to bloom the following season.)

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Millionaires are commonplace in the Hamptons as are million dollar homes. A mere million dollars no longer exemplifies wealth and million dollar house no longer represent a residence of the rich, but instead characterizes a fairly standard home. To be a wealthy land baron in the Hamptons today one needs to have a net worth of many millions and in order to afford select estates here, maybe even the billions. In fact, there are a few billionaires right here in our mist. Ralph Lauren has reportedly purchased the local East Hampton haunt "The Blue Parrot," a low key bar & Tex-Mex restaurant. There are also rumors that the fashion giant has his eye on the East Hampton Point Resort, a resort and marina that is listed for $55 million. The buzz is that he intends to open a high-end club on the property that includes 12 cottages and a restaurant. It is listings such as this one that can truly define the level of affluence needed in order to buy a substantial piece of real estate in this area.

Investor Ronald Perelman is another billionaire who has some interests here in the Hamptons. The financial mogul has a sprawling waterfront property and mansion on Georgica Pond, an area that is packed with some of the wealthiest people in the country.

Many celebrities and other prominent individuals seek refuge in the privacy an estate here can afford them. A good deal of these estates include many acres of undeveloped land (now worth an absolute fortune) to serve as a natural privacy fence. Some are even so secluded that they are difficult to find.

For some, the mile long drives, winding beach roads or secured gates are still not enough. Celebrities or high profile figures have gone as far as to buy estates on private islands to insure ultimate privacy such as Mick Jagger, who kept an estate on the island of Mustique. Britain's Princess Margaret also maintained an estate on the same island. Sir Richard Branson owns Necker Island, in Virgin Gorda, where he runs a high-end resort. It is made up of Balinese-style cottages and the entire island will only accommodate up to 28 guests at a time. Marlon Brando was a recluse in French Polynesia, on the island of Tetiaroa, for many years.

To buy on to or buy into a private island takes some real money. There are not many for sale, as most of them have already been divided, developed or have become resort properties. This makes them so rare that for other than the extremely wealthy, they are virtually untouchable. There are even realtors who specialize in listing and selling private islands around the world. A Coldwell Banker brokerage in Australia called "Morrison's Private Islands" does just that. Currently the highest priced private island for sale in the world is on Fiji. The island of Vatu is listed for $75 million.

The East End's own Gardiners Island is the largest privately-owned island in North America. This island, located between the two Forks in Gardiners Bay is 6 miles long, 3 miles wide and has 27 miles of pristine shoreline. It has been owned by the same family for 400 years. In 1980, the island was said to be worth an estimated $125 million. Taking into consideration the fact that real estate values have easily tripled since that time, coupled with factors such as the island's unique qualities and historical value – well, you do the math. The value of this little island may very well be incalculable. A wood shed on the property is the oldest remaining structure in New York State. When the Lord of the Manor, John Gardiner, passed away just a little more than a year ago, his niece inherited the property. At that time there was much talk about the development of the island, but we have yet to see any changes. The island and its buildings have remained much as they were 100 years ago. There is a windmill and many of the roads are still dirt. The island generates its own electricity and costs more than a million a year to maintain. That fact can give you a good idea what a million dollars will buy here.

MAKE NICE
Dear Dan,

Re your story "A Claim....." in the October 13 issue, I guess you didn't receive my letter on the subject, with the number to call for 'your' problem:

It's 800-SUE'M All. Good luck.

POTATO, POTAHTO
Dear Dan,

Fall greetings. How are you? I refer to the attached page of the current edition of your newspaper. We were shocked to see such a glaring, basic grammatical error made by professionals. It is correct to write ".....Led by Whom?" and incorrect to write ".....Led by Who"? Perhaps you think your readers neither know nor care. Even in this era of "dumbing down," declining literacy, and students in schools not learning the basics, we need to maintain correct written English. We certainly still do expect normal standards to be upheld: good grammar, basic to reputable journalism, even from a free, small town newspaper.

Thank you.

UNDOCUMENTED
Dear Dan,

Listening to the passionate discussions of so-called immigration experts, I wonder why the American government having such a headache doesn't ask for help from another country. Let's say Poland. I am sure that Poland would extend its helping hand to such a valuable friend.

One says that an undocumented immigrant steals a job that an American could do. The other immediate response is that an American wouldn't work for this kind of money – he has to have a decent salary for what he does. But nobody explains what "a decent salary" means. I wonder whether the salaries of those who talk about this subject are decent ones.

Why there are no interviews with those who are directly involved in this matter? How is it possible that an undocumented immigrant can live for an indecent salary and at the same time can help his family he or she left behind and an American still lives with his mother? Maybe an American, whose job was stolen, in revenge, could try to sneak in to another country to see how it is. Let's say to Poland. I know that my cousin would hire an illegal American with opened arms. He needs someone to help him to pick up potatoes or dig out beets. And I am sure that an American would get a decent salary, a decent dinner and he would also, indecently, get drunk. However, I don't know whether he would be able to send a piece of his decent salary to his mother.

Some of the experts suggest that a high wire fence or a thick wall will prevent an illegal wave flooding America. Once I was visiting my aunt in the country and I saw chickens behind a wire fence. It didn't take too long for them to find a way to some seeds that accidentally were spread in front of that fence. My uncle punished one of the birds, wringing the poor bird's neck and we had a good dinner that evening. Our stomachs were happy but it didn't solve the problem. The rest of the chickens got smart and crossed the fence when nobody was watching them.

As to walls, we had at least two in our history: one in China and the other in Germany. Although those who made those walls were convinced that nobody could surmount them, it appeared that the devil is not as black as he is painted. What's more, I am sure that in 100 years some of American tourists proudly will be showing a hole in the wall that his or her grandfather had forced his way through to the paradise.

In my opinion the only solution to solve the illegal immigration problem in America is to take for consideration a Polish advice: there is no job available for illegal immigrants – there are no illegal immigrants. The borders are secured. There is no need for fences and walls of any kind. Period.

But will America listen to such a small country like Poland?

BAN FOR BONFIRES
Dear Dan,

I find it distressing that you ridiculed beachgoers and beach home front owners who are concerned about the condition of our beaches (10/20). May I ask, how often do you actually walk our beaches? Especially during the summer months? If you did, you would find our once beautiful, white sandy beaches have turned black. Yes, the Village and Town have tried to keep them clean. I've watched a truck come by and toss charred wood into it but leaver all the black chips on the sand. It was sad to hear that not only the oceanfront is under attack but Napeague as well.

As for the dog poop, it would be nice if everyone would pick up after their dogs and not leave bagged and loose poop to be picked up by the rest of us. As far as the cacophony which exists on the beach, it would be nice to have our serene beaches given back to us. Do you know that every Friday afternoon loud speakers blare on Main Beach in front of the hut? And what about all the catered parties that are given on the beaches?

Our beaches are sacred and should be treated with respect. It's what brings us all to the east End. Why not fight to preserve its beauty? Our population has dramatically increased and with this must come restrictions. Many today think only about their pleasure with total disregard of the environment and the people around them. This is a great cost to us. I am one of many imploring the Town and Village to continue to make restrictions. Banning bonfires would be unfortunate but necessary. The other concern is fire spreading to the beach grass. As for the manpower to enforce these rules, I hope they have the time to do so. Just for the record, I do enjoy bonfires but am willing to give them up for the sake of our beaches.

Police Blotter

The Statue Caper

A man who owns a home on Dune Road in Hampton Bays told police that someone stole two statues, worth a combined $6,000, from the front steps of his home. Police have ruled out the possibility of the statues coming to life and walking off.

Should Have Paid

A man was arrested in Southampton because he failed to pay a fine. He paid the $180 fine and was released. He was fined for not paying the fine.

Black Spray Paint

Police investigated a call in Amagansett and found black paint sprayed on the bathroom doors at Indian Wells and Atlantic Avenue beaches. Nobody was arrested, but the officers enjoyed a well-deserved bathroom break.

More Damaged Mailboxes?

Out in Montauk, police get calls nearly every week because of smashed mailboxes. Last week, police found damaged mailboxes on West Lake Drive, Greenwich Street, Fairview Avenue, and Granada Place. Some residents now have booby-trapped their mailboxes so that they will explode with fox urine should they be struck. Other residents have set up digital video cameras to monitor their mailboxes because of the rash of mailbox assaults.

Drive-by

A man in Amagansett reported that somebody drove by the ballfield that he was playing at in a white truck. The window of the truck was then rolled down and somebody from inside of the truck fired two shots from a B.B. gun at the field. The man then called police to report the incident. This is the Hamptons version of a drive-by shooting.

A Ninja?

Riverhead police are on the hunt for a man in a ninja costume carrying a sword. No joke. A guy who dressed up like a ninja over Halloween had a real ninja sword that he brought to a party which was attended by about 300 people. A melée broke out at the party and a man from Farmingdale was seriously cut by the sword. The guy that was injured came up from behind the ninja when the injury occurred because he was afraid that the ninja was going to hurt somebody. Police are unsure if the assault was intentional or not, but are on the look out for the ninja man and would like to talk with him. If you have some information on this incident you can call (631) 727-4500.

Hunting The Hunter

There were three separate calls last week in Shelter Island reporting that a hunter was hunting on private property. When each call was investigated, it was determined that the hunter had permission from the property owners to hunt. Following the complaints that hunters were hunting without permission, which were determined to be legally on the property, a hunter reported that a tree stand was stolen. Hmmmm.

Small Town...

Both Republican and Democratic candidates have reported that their campaign signs have been stolen from various road locations. In one incident, a candidate's family was posting signs around town in Southampton when they saw a guy pull up in a truck, get out of the truck, and steal a sign. The candidate chased the guy in the truck and caught up with him. He noticed that there were a bunch of signs piled up in the back. The driver sped away and has yet to be identified. Talk about small town politics!
